Poles Arm to Defend Danzig; Slovaks Call Fliers to Border War

Warsaw Seeks Huge Loan; Nazis Open Propaganda Drive for Free City

By the Associated Press.

Warsaw, March 27.—Poland today announced a huge extraordinary national defense loan to "assure new successes for Polish arms" should difficulties arise with growing Germany or any of her neighbors.

The belief increased in Warsaw that Nazi Germany was planning a new blow in Danzig, where Poland has sworn to protect her minority and maritime rights.

It was persistently reported that Reichs Fuehrer Hitler had brought to the attention of the Polish government a four-point list of demands relating to Danzig and the Polish Corridor.

Official circles were silent and sources close to the government said the four points in the reported suggestions given Warsaw by Berlin were based on "speculation and presumption."

Annexation Demand Reported

Nevertheless it was persistently reported Germany had indirectly indicated she would be pleased to get Polish consent to the following proposals:

Outright annexation of Danzig by Germany.

A German highway across Pomorze (the Polish corridor) from Germany to East Prussia.

German control of the important railway junction of Bohumin, now in Polish hands.

Propaganda Drive Opened

[Official spokesmen in Berlin denied insistently that Germany had any designs on Danzig or Poland or that any note had been sent to Polad.

[Nevertheless, Germany's high-geared propaganda machine lashed out today at Poland, prompting the belief that Hitler may be preparing for a quick showdown on the question of Danzig and the Corridor.

[In the wake of press dispatches alleging that German women and children had been beaten in Polish Corridor towns for speaking their mother language, a semiofficial German statement voiced "amazement" over this state of affairs, the International News Service reported.

[The tone of the statement and the dispatches were ominously reminiscent of the propaganda campaigns that paved the way for Hitler's demolition of the Czecho-Slovak republic and restoration of Memel to the Feich.

Nazi Ultimatum Forecast

[The Post's correspondent in Berlin reported that an official German demand that Poland take steps to control anti-German demonstrations in the Polish Corridor appeared to be a virtual certainty.—Editor's note.]

Immediately after, President Ignace Moccicki announced the issue of an internal loan of 1,200,000,000 zloty ($225,600,000) for warplanes and air defense. Gen. Stanaslas Skwarezynski, chief of the National Unity Movement, only party represented in Parliament, pointedly recalled the Polish victory over German knights at Grunwald in 1410.

Skwarczynski's statement was interpreted to mean that Poland is ready and determined to fight if necessary without waiting for Britain and France to form a "stop Hitler" bloc with iron-clad guarantees of military assistance.

Poles "Confident of Power"

"Historical events are taking place near our frontiers," Skwarczynski said, in an apparent reference to German annexation of Memel and to the dissolution of Czecho-Slovakia.

"We look upon these important changes quietly because our security is based on confidence in our power and strength."

(The Polish corridor was detached from Germany to give newly independent Poland access to the Baltic after the World War. Most of West Poland is inhabited by Poles, but some Germans were included in the area.

(The Free City of Danzig, at the head of the corridor, was made independent under League of Nations protection after the World War. Through its Senate, however, control of the city has come under Danzig Nazis.)

Developments In Europe

MADRID'S FALL to Spanish Nationalists appeared imminent as the Republican Defense Council aided flight of civilians wishing to escape Franco and demobilized recruits who had not yet joined the army.

FRANCE'S PREMIER, Daladier, was reported to have won his cabinet's support for not talking terms with Italy until Il Duce makes specific claims, although Foreign Minister Bonnet was said to be prepared to resign. Page 8.

BRITAIN PREPARED to answer Hitler's challenge by further increases in her military establishment, but denied she was considering an economic boycott against Germany "with U. S. co-operation." Page 8.

RUMANIAN PREMIER Calinescu invited Britain, France and other nations to negotiate trade pacts with his country, which he said preserved freedom of action under last week's treaty with Germany. Page 8.

Hungarians Launch Air, Artillery Attack In Two Sectors as Negotiators Meet

By the United Press.

Bratislava, Slovakia, March 27.—The Nazi-controlled government of Slovakia tonight ordered mobilization of air force and antiaircraft reserves as the "war" with neighboring Hungary developed into bitter fighting along the eastern frontier.

Advices from Eperjes, near the border of Carpatho-Ukrainia (Ruthenia) which was annexed by Hungary by force ten days ago, said the Hungarian army had launched an offensive in the Michalovce and Sobrance sectors with bombing planes and artillery.

The new fighting coincided with the start of Slovakian-Hungarian negotiations at the foreign ministry in Budapest seeking terms of peace and a new definition of the Slovakian-Ruthenian border.

Eight Slovaks Killed

The Hungarian army chief of staff also anounced that Hungarian troops had been instructed to take "most energetic counter action" against any future frontier violations.

The partial mobilization, applying to five classes of reserves, was regarded as a warning to Hungary that the Slovaks are prepared for indefinite resistance unless the negotiations in Budapest result in acceptance of Slovakia's three-point demands, as follows:

All hostilities must cease immediately.

Hungarian troops must withdraw from Slovak soil.

A frontier commission must be appointed and immediately demark the new boundary.

Little if any progress was made in the negotiators' two-hour session at Budapest today.

Atrocities Charged

Slovakian newspapers sought to prepare the people for the prospect of further fighting. The government organ, Slovenska Pravda, said Hungarian fliers machine-gunned and killed two Slovak aviators who were forced to jump with parachutes after an aerial battle with 12 enemy planes.

"Such a thing was not done during the entire World War," the newspaper said.

A Budapest communique asserted the Slovaks Sunday and early today "violated" Hungary's frontier east of Metzenseifen, shooting at a Hungarian frontier guard, at Magykazmar and Mihaly, where frontier posts alegedly were attacked, and at Kiskolon.

"The Slovaks suffered eight dead and several wounded and seven Slovaks were captured," the communique said. "There were no Hungarian casualties."

Hungarians Take Town

(Budapest dispatches also reported a further advance on Hunagarian troops into Slovakia where they were said to have reached the important town of Michalovce.)

The Slovakian mobilization decree, isused by the ministry of defense, called up immediately the five youngest classes of air force reserve officers and antiaircroft officers. The three youngest classes of antiaircraft personnel and all classes of air force mechanics and technicians.

It was anounced military pilots of all ages would be accepted for voluntary service.

It was not known how far the new Hungarian attack was initiated by the local Hungarian commanders or to what extent it was due to orders from Budapest.

It was assumed, however, it was intended as a last effort to advance the Hungarian occupation—it already has penetrated nearly 15 miles—as far as posible before the negotiators in Budapest reach a decision on the new frontier.

Fall of Madrid Without Battle Appears Near

Recruits Demobilized; Junta Appears Ready To Yield City Quietly

By the Associated Press.

Madrid, (Tuesday), March 28—The fall of Madrid to Gen. Franco's Nationalists appeared imminent early today.

Possible quick capitaulation by the Republican National Defense council was indicated by two sudden moves late last night.

First the council began assisting the flight of those wishing to escape possible vengeance at the hands of the Nationalists. Later it demobilized recruits who had been called up but who had not yet joined the army.

The demobilization move confirmed the belief the defense council did not intend to resist the Nationalists who today opened up an encircling offensive

At the same time the council was trying to keep the city orderly, observers, believed, as a prelude to peaceful entry by Franco's troops.

Repeated appeals were broadcast over the union radio for the papulation to remain calm.

Among the speakers broadcasting were Gen. Segismundo Casado, republican defense minister, and representatives of the Anarchist and Socialist parties.

Casado declared:

"We continue our labors to insure peace as soon as possible.

"We want to end the war and attain peace.

"In the name of all Spaniards I

Arab Revolt Chief Killed Fleeing British Trap

Jerusalem, March 27 (U.P.).—Abdul Rahim Haj Mohammed, regarded as the commander in chief of the Arab rebellion in the Holy Land, was killed today when he attempted to escape from British troops in the village of Sanoor, north of Nablus.

British military and police patrols, carrying out a routine search of villages, were fired upon from a house in Sanoor and immediately threw a cordon around the settlement.

Abdul Rahim was killed when he attempted to break through the cordon.

Love, Not Drugs, Won Rich Widow, Stinson Tells Court

In a District courtroom filled mostly with women, Joseph Whitlaw Stinson, 56-year-old artist-attorney, yesterday told his version of how he wooed and won to marriage Mrs. Pepita Crounse, 54, wealthy Washington widow.

He protested his "very real love" for the former Mrs. Crounse and declared that in urging her to set up a trust fund "to increase her income" he did not have himself in mind as the beneficiary.

"She said she wanted to seal my future. She appeared to have a great deal of affection and sentiment for me, and told her bankers the trust was not at all in connection with our oncoming marriage," he said.

Mrs. Stinson, who is charging that she was drugged into the marriage and that Stinson was in a conspiracy with Miss Jessica Shoemaker, her nurse, to mulct her of her fortune, shook her head negatively at various times during the afternoon and whispered emphatically with her lawyers.

Reminding the witness that "she got a pint of that drug on May 24," Justice Luhring asked Stinson whether Mrs. Crounse appeared to

Biggest Warcraft In World Sought; Senate Votes Army $513,000,000

The Navy asked Congress yesterday for funds for two "super-battleships" of 45,000 tons, the largest the world has ever seen, as the Senate passed the $513,188,882 record peace-time Army appropriations bill with almost no dissent.

Appearing before a House appropriations subcommittee beginning hearings on naval budget estimates totaling more than three-quarters of a billion dollars, officials proposed that the two battleships in next year's building program be 10,000 tons heavier than six 35,000-ton craft now under construction.

Hints at Opposition

Chairman Scrugham (Democrat), of Nevada, of the subcommittee, in revealing the Navy recommendation, indicated there may be opposition in his group to the plan. He said "the question of the size of the ships will have to be given careful consideration." Cost of the huge vessels, which would be 5,000 tons heavier than the latest ships Great Britain has laid down, will range upwards of $80,000,000, perhaps $100,000,000 each.

Only one voice was raised against the Army measure during the brief debate. Senator King (Democrat), of Utah, telling the Senate, "We should not be swept off our feet by the fires raging in Europe," proposed to cut the bill by 10 per cent. In the voice ballot taken on this motion, not a single aye was heard, not even from King.

Upon passage, the measure was sent back to the House. Amendments totaling $13,330,946 were added by the Senate Appropriations Committee and these will be considered in conference. No changes were made in the bill on the floor.

Other Developments

Other developments:

President Roosevelt asked for an additional $19,374,500 for the Navy, principally for aviation, and proposed that $16,189,600 of the budget estimates for ship construction be spent for new equipment and facilities at Navy yards and stations. This brings the total proposed for the Navy next year to $758,808,453.

Ranking aviation officials of the Army and Navy gave strong support to plans to train 20,000 civil air pilots. Testifying before the House Interstate Commerce Committee on a proposal for the Civil Aeronautics Authority to give preliminary training to college students Rear Admiral Arthur B. Cook, Chief of the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics, and Brig. Gen. B. K. Yount, Assistant Chief of the Army Air Corps, said that the program would be invaluable in time of emergency.

Col. P. G. Weiser, air attache at the French Embassy here, announced that his government had placed an order for an additional 100 bombing planes in the United States. The order, for twin-engine light bombers from the Glenn L. Martin Co., of Baltimore, Md., brings to 715 the number of war planes the French have bought

Smithsonian Staff Member, Ill, Ends Life

A 25-year-old member of the Smithsonian Institution staff last night ended his life with a shot through the temple as he lay ill in bed in his Arlington home.

His wife, Lucille, discovered the body of Edwin F. Campbell, of 4151 Anderson road north, Arlington, at 6:45 p. m., only a few minutes after the shooting.

Dr. J. H. Gillen, a friend of the family, who called police, said Campbell had been ill for some time. A pistol was found in Campbell's right hand, police said. Dr. W. C. Welburn, coroner, issued a verdict of suicide.

Hughes Continues His Convalescence

Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, convalescing from an attack of grippe suffered three weeks ago, missed sessions of the Supreme Court yesterday and will continue to rest for a few days, court attaches said last night. Justice Roberts, however, recovered from an operation, returned to take his seat on the bench.

Representatives Joseph Mansfield, of Texas, and Sam MacReynolds, of Tennessee, were reported improving at Naval Hospital. Mansfield, suffering an intestinal disorder, may undergo an operation. MacReynolds is recovering from a bronchitis relapse.

House Votes Sweeping WPA Inquiry

$150,000,000 Grant To Be Disposed of First; Urban Bloc Plans Farm 'Deal'

The House yesterday by a vote of 352 to 27 ordered a "thorough investigation" of the Works Progress Administration by the House Appropriations Committee to obtain data "necessary as a basis of legislation."

Approval of the move initiated by Representative Cox (Democrat), of Georgia, followed support by Democratic leaders, who said the inquiry could "only reflect credit on the Administration." Only 26 Democrats and one Farmer-Laborite voted "no."

The inquisitorial action came on the eve of House Appropriations Committee disposal of the President's request for another $150,000,000 for the WPA, but a committee spokesman said the WPA inquiry will be delayed until after the deficiency fund is voted.

City Bloc Plans "Deal"

A meeting of the appropriations deficiency sub-committee to consider the WPA fund meanwhile was called for tomorrow by Chairman Taylor. Economy-minded members of the committee are prepared to move for a $50,000,000 cut.

In a countereffort by "big city" members to vote the full $150,000,000 asked by the Administration, House farm bloc members today will be threatened with rejection of the $250,000,000 unbudgeted farm parity price provision of the Agriculture appropriation bill unless they assure the WPA "fair treatment."

Following an informal conference of the urban members yesterday, Representative Sabbath (Democrat), of Illinois, said he will vote for the farm parity price payments, but expects support from rural members when the WPA item comes before the House.

Investigation to Wait

"Most of my city colleagues will do the same, unless we hear they don't intend to play fair," said Sabbath. "And if they don't, we can still defeat their bill. There are many ways of skinning a cat."

The rejoinder of Representative Jones (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the Agriculture Committee, and advocate of farm parity payments, was:

"If they want war, they will have war."

Meanwhile, Chairman Taylor of the House Appropriations Committee, intimated he does not intend to launch the WPA investigations until several more of the big appropriation bills are disposed of.

"We can't stop the work of the committee to make this investigation," said Taylor. "After I have studied the matter, I expect to appoint a sub-committee to conduct the inquiry. Or I may direct the regular deficiencies sub-committee to do it."

Taylor is chairman of the deficiency sub-committee. He said he might personally direct the relief investigation, "in which case I will rely heavily on some of the younger members to help me." Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Vir-

District Given Jurisdiction in All Traffic Cases

Wherever traffic accidents happen in the District—on Federal park grounds or public streets—prosecution should come from office of the Corporation Counsel rather than be brought by the United States Attorney, the Court of Appeals ruled yesterday.

Heretofore, authority over traffic cases has been divided and there has been no clear ruling as to who has jurisdiction in certain instances.

The ruling was made in the case of Jack H. Persham, local dry cleaner, who was convicted in Police Court of reckless driving in Monument Grounds on information filed by the United States Attorney.

Attorneys for Persham argued that the accident occurred at the intersection of Fifteenth street and Constitution avenue and not in the Monument Grounds. The Appeals Court ruled, however, that it made no difference whether the accident was on Federal property.

Two South American jaguars were born yesterday in the Zoo, it was announced by Dr. William M. Mann, director. The cubs will be screened from public view for at least three weeks. Their eyes will not open for another ten days, the director said.

Court Rules States May Tax Salaries Of U. S. Employes

Ruling Clears Way For D. C. Income Levy, But Raises Residence Puzzle

The Supreme Court's decision on Federal salaries yesterday cleared the way for a District income tax on Government employes living here, but left officials puzzled about its possible effect on revenue.

District leaders were unprepared to say whether they would seek change in the proposed new tax program now before Congress. The tax plan includes provisions for an income tax on salaries over $14,000, originally designed to test the District's power to tax Government salaries.

Schwert Favors Income Levy

With House committee hearings on the tax program scheduled to be finished Tuesday, Representative Schwert (Democrat), of New York, said late last week he favored a graduated income tax rather than the sales levy.

In the District Building and on Capitol Hill, officials said the Supreme Court decision, while answering the question whether the District would be able to tax Federal salaries, raised the new question of whether the District would be able to collect revenue from Government employes who work here, but live in Virginia or Maryland, or have voting residences in other States.

Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, said he did not believe the District would be able to levy an income tax upon Federal employes living in Maryland. It was pointed out that, of an estimated 120,000 persons employed here under the executive civil service, many live beyond the District line.

Jos. V. Morgan, of the District Board of Tax Apeals, said the decision had removed any doubt as to the power of Congress, in its role as legislative body for the District, to impose an income tax on Government employes here. He added that the District could expect very little revenue from Federal employes living in Maryland or Virginia, because they would have to be granted a credit for the amount they pay to the State.

"Double Taxation" Issue

He pointed out that the States wherein Federal employes claim a legal or voting residence might impose an income tax upon these employes.

"Such an employe," he said, "would be estopped from denying that he is a resident of that State, since by voting he has exercised the rights of residence."

"At the same time the District might impose an income tax on such employes without any allowance or credit for a tax paid the State on the ground that they are actually domiciled in the District. It might be held that the right of the District to tax these employes cannot be defeated by the exercise of the same right by a State."

While Morgan cited the probability of a "double taxation" question, members of the Congressional Joint Committee on Internal Revenue said Congress would not be expected to compel Federal employes to pay income tax to the District if they were taxed in their home States, or to give up voting rights in their home States to avoid the issue of double taxation.

Treasury experts predicted that many Federal employes in Washington, who have maintained voting residences in their home States, would abandon the practice and become full-fledged citizens of the District, since the income levy has not yet been established here.

Opponents of a sales tax in the District welcomed the Supreme Court ruling. Louis Sherman, of the social legislation committee of the

President Faces $5,550 N. Y. Tax

Albany, N. Y., March 27 (AP).—The Federal income of President Roosevelt, who lives at Hyde Park, N. Y., comes under a United States Supreme Court's decision today permitting States to tax Federal employes' salaries.

ROOSEVELT

The tribunal's decision may cost the President approximately $5,500 on his $75,000 salary, a State tax department official said. He arrived at his figures, he explained, by granting the usual $2,500 marital exemption and levying a 2 per cent tax on the first $1,000 of income thereafter, a graduated impost of 3 and 6 per cent respectively on the next two successive $2,000, and a 7 per cent tax on the balance.

Clipper Rests After Record Hop to Azores

Ship Is Inspected After 'Perfect' Start Of Shakedown Cruise

By the United Press.

Horta, Azores Islands, March 27.—Capt. Harold E. Gray, commander of Pan-American Airways 41-ton flying boat, the Yankee Clipper, announced tonight the big ship will take off "Wednesday or Thursday" on the second leg of its maiden flight across the Atlantic.

The clipper arrived here at 8:07 a. m., E. S. T., after what Gray described as a "perfect" flight from Baltimore, averaging 163 miles per hour for the 2,880-mile hop to the Azores—first stop in a 15,000-mile "shakedown" cruise.

Gray said the giant ship, which carried 21 persons—largest number ever to attempt an Atlantic flight in a heavier-than-air craft, will be subjected to rigid inspection before it proceeds to Lisbon, Marseilles, Southampton and Foynes, Ireland. Radio weather reporting facilities, he said, will receive particular attention.

The clipper, which is one and one-half times the size of the clippers flying the Pacific Ocean route, is making the flight in preparation for inauguration of regular transatlantic flight service this summer. Six similar planes are to be placed in commercial operation by Pan-American.

The flight from Baltimore, records disclosed, was marked by timetable accuracy. The big silver ship left Baltimore at 2:34 p. m. yester-

20 Shaken Up As Plane Misses Airport, Crashes

Atlanta, Ga., March 27 (I.N.S.).—Twenty persons aboard an Eastern Airlines transport plane narrowly escaped injury today when the big ship overshot the Atlanta Airport.

The 17 passengers were shaken up and a few bruised when the plane landed in a plowed field, bumped across a dirt road and stopped with its tail in the air after striking a small embankment.

Damage to the plane was small outside of a smashed under carriage. Most of the passengers on the Miami to Chicago run elected to wait for a special plane and continue their trip by air.

Third of Cherry Trees in Bloom As 38-Degree Chill Is Forecast

Cherry Blossom Festival officials last night suffered a mild attack of jitters as the Weather Bureau predicted an end to the three-day visit of near-tropical weather today, with a drop in temperature to 38 degrees.

Shortly after C. Marshall Finnan, National Capital Parks superintendent, announced the blossoms were "one-third out" and showing "terrific progress" under unusual weather conditions, the bureau reported cold weather would grip the capital today.

Skies will be fair, but the temperature will hover in the low 40's most of the day, the forecaster said. The mercury rose from a low of 64 degrees at 9 a. m. to 71 at 2 p. m. The break in the heat wave came after rains visited the Capital and nearby areas, to check threats of further forest and grass fires which caused untold damage over the week-end.

Flashing a play-by-play account of the progress of the famed blossoms around the Tidal Basin, Finnan said the cherry trees should burst forth like so much popcorn by Friday, date for the opening of the Cherry Blossom Festival.

6-2 Decision Also Removes Barrier To Federal Levy on Commonwealth Pay

By Robert C. Albright.

The Supreme Court yesterday cut away a century of precedent in a sweeping decision declaring salaries of Federal employes subject to State taxation and removing immunity of State officials from Federal income tax.

Tantamount to a rejection of the doctrine of inter-governmental tax immunity, the 6-to-2 decision by Justice Stone cleared the way for reciprocal taxation of Federal and State employes' incomes and rendered virtually unnecessary an administration bill for the same purpose.

The salary tax bill, which already had passed the House and is now on the Senate calendar, is expected to be enacted regardless, to protect affected salaries from retroactive taxation.

The decision in effect opened an almost untapped source of revenue to both Federal and State Governments. Congressional experts estimated the yield from Federal taxation of State incomes at approximately $16,000,000 on the present tax structure, and believed State governments might collect at least that much on Federal salaries.

The Federal Government has approximately 1,200,000 employes, and State and local governments, 2,500,000, all hitherto immune. Thousands of these, whose salaries fall below Federal or State excmptions, will continue to escape taxation.

Silent on Securities

Specifically, the court ruled New York could tax the $2,400 salary of an employe of the Home Owners Loan Corporation, but in so doing the court overruled all court precedents which recognize "an implied constitutional immunity from income taxation of the officers or employes of the national or a State government or their instrumentalities."

On the question of reciprocal taxation on Federal and State securities, subject of another recommendation by the President, the opinion was silent.

In line with the far-reaching Stone ruling, another tax case was remanded to the Utah Supreme Court for further proceedings. In an opinion by Justice Black, the court said an attorney claiming exemption on fees from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation is not immune on Constitutional grounds. As the Utah tax law exempts income received from the exercise of an essential Federal function, the Utah court was directed to decide the case "apart from any question of Constitutional immunity."

Butler, McReynolds Dissent

But Justices Butler and McReynolds strongly dissented from the broader ruling. Justice Frankfurter filed a concurring opinion, and Chief Justice Hughes concurred "in the result."

"Futile indeed," protested Butler and MeReynolds, "are the vague intimations that this court may protect against excessive or destructive taxation. Where the power to tax exists, Legislatures may exert it to destroy, to discourage, to protect, or exclusively for the purpose of raising revenue."

Justice Frankfurter, in his concurring opinion, declared "State

SEC Suspends Junius Richards, New York Broker

By the Associated Press.

The Securities and Exchang Commission yesterday suspended Junius A. Richards from seven stock exchanges for ten days on the ground he helped two British firms manipulate an American stock.

The commission opinion said Richards' punishment was lessened because he co-operated in investigation of the case, and because one of his partners brought the matter to the commission's attention.

Richards is a member of the New York firm of Smith, Barney & Co., but the order specifically said that no responsibility attached to the firm or any of its other partners.

Republicans Cut Party Line In Parity Vote

Conference Frees Members to Follow 'Their Consciences'

The House is expected to reach a vote today on the hot issue of $250,000,000 for farm parity payments in the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill.

House Republicans at a conference last night decided not to make the vote a party issue, Minority LIeader Martin, of Massachusetts, remarking after the meeting:

"Republican members will vote their consciences on farm parity and the supplemental relief appropriation, since they are not partisan matters."

Conservatives Count 140

However, consetrvative Republicans, including Representative Taber, of New York, and Gifford, of Massachusetts, predicted to International News Service that 140 of the 169 Republicans would vote against parity payments.

Earlier in the day at a meeting of the House "liberal" bloc, decision was reached to warn members of the appropriations committee that unless they vote for the full $150,000,000 relief fund asked by President Roosevelt, the bloc will oppose the farm fund.

Representative Marcantonio (American Labor), New York, said after the meeting that if city members vote today for the parity appropriation, "It would be safe to assume that we will be fixed all right" on the relief fund.

City Bloc Threatening

Present at the bloc's meeting were a number of representatives from cities which have substantial unemployment and who are for the large relief fund.

Representative Bradley (Democrat), Pennsylvania, said that unless the city group obtained sufficient pledges from farm State members to assure passage of the relief appropriation, they would vote against parity.

President Roosevelt signed yesterday a bill authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make advances to farmers to enable them to pay premiums for insurance with the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation.

The advances would be made from existing appropriations to farmers participating in the present crop control program.

Cotton Sale Fought

Two Senators from the cotton belt—George, of Georgia, and Smith, of South Carolina—battled in the enate meanwhile for adoption of a resolution opposing reported plans of Administration heads to sell Government-owned cotton in foreign markets at prices below the Government loans that were made upon the staple.

This plan is being seriously considered in the Department of Agriculture, George said in predicting that if foreign manufacturers are given a subsidy not granted to American mills the result will be chaos in the cotton cloth industry as well as other industries in which cotton is used.

Opposition to the resolution was voiced by Republican Leader McNary, of Oregon, who said it would be impossible for the Secretary of Agriculture "to get rid of a bale of this cotton in the world market, which is 2 cents below the domestic price," if the George resolution is adopted.

Doctors to File Demurrer Soon In Trust Fight

The basic legal issues involved in the criminal conspiracy prosecution of "organized medicine" will be fought out before Justice Proctor in District Court April 17.

The American Medical Association and other defendants will present their arguments on a demurrer to the indictment, due to be filed today or tomorrow, by which they attack the validity of the indictment and the legal foundation of the prosecution.

The A. M. A. was accused last December of criminal conspiracy in restraint of trade for its campaign against Group Health Association, Inc.

The defendants claim the healing arts are professional in character and cannot be reached by the Sherman Antitrust act, which was designed to correct trade abuses. The wording of the Sherman act also is called in question for "vagueness." Thirteen other reasons for queshing the indictment are advanced.

No Dissent Seen In Confirmation Of Douglas Today

By International News Service.

Senate confirmation today of William O. Douglas as a justice of the Supreme Court to succeed Justice Brandeis, retired, probably without a dissenting voice, was foreshadowed yesterday as the Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously approved his nomination.

The committee decision came after a subcommittee had likewise recommended confirmation without a dissenting vote.

Senator Ashurst (Democrat), of Arizona, committee chairman, announced he would call up the Douglas nomination in the Senate today.

Action of the committee came after only 15 minutes of executive session in which Douglas, 40-year-old chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, had appeared in event committeemen cared to ask him questions. Satisfied with his qualifications, committeemen shook his hands in congratulation.

House Votes WPA Inquiry; Deficiency Action to Come First

ginia, leader of the House economy bloc, formerly served as "acting" chairman of the sub-committee, but was displaced by Taylor when the President's $150,000,000 deficiency estimate was sent up.

Two Months for Study

Meantime, Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, asked Congress to direct WPA to spend its present funds until exhausted June 7, and that Congress meanwhile study WPA and relief needs.

He revised a former resolution following receipt of a letter from WPA Administrator Harrington stating that WPA funds will all be expended by June 7.

"That will give us two full months in which to draft some permanent relief system which may be an improvement on the one we now have," said Vandenberg.

"There is no need for a supplementary appropriation, whatever it may be, until June 7."

May Ask $30,000

Vandenberg's resolution to deny further WPA funds until Congressional studies are completed precipitated a general Republican attack on the relief agency. Senator Wiley, of Wisconsin, and Senator Bridges, of New Hampshire, assailed WPA costs, accused Democrats of jumping when "the whip's been cracked" and said money needed for relief is going to "political pets."

To finance the House Appropriations committee's investigation of WPA a $30,000 allotment from the House contingency fund is expected to be asked of the House Accounts Committee. The Cox resolution specifies the committee shall report "as soon as practicable during the present Congress." The committee is empowered to sit "at such times and places" as it chooses, to subpena and swear witnesses, and the resolution provides penalties for refusal to answer questions or for willful "default."

House Republicans in a strategy conference meanwhile informally decided not to make a party issue of either the President's $150,000,000 relief estimates, or the $250,000,000 farm parity provision of the agriculture bill. But a preponderant majority of House Republicans will vote against both proposals.

No "Whitewash"

Cox denied he was asking a "political investigation" and declared there would be no "whitewash.' He said the inquiry was necessary because of maladministration charges against WPA, but denied it was necessarily "hostile to WPA.

In a paradoxical situation, both Majority Leader Rayburn and Minority Leader Martin took the floor in support of the investigation.

"I think it will reflect credit on WPA," said Rayburn. "As far as I am concerned, I am very pleased to allow this investigation to go on."

Only One Speaks Against

Martin, on the other hand, charged "politics" in the WPA and said "the people demand that this agency be conducted in a fair and impartial manner."

Although 27 members voted against the inquiry, the only member taking the floor against it was Chairman Sabbath, of the House Rules Committee. Sabbath charged it was designed to promote "unfair publicity" to defeat the $150,000,000 WPA deficiency estimate.

Air Authority Bars Plane Flight From Illinois to Poland

Permission to fly from Springfield, Ill., to Warsaw, Poland, yesterday was denied Stanley W. Kluzek by the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Officials said the action had been taken since "neither the airplane which Kluzek proposed to use nor his own training . . . were such as to warrant permission . . ."

Laszlo Vadas and William Bekassy, of Budapest, Hungary, were authorized to fly from Brownsville, Tex., to New York in either of the two-seater cabin monoplanes of the Aeronautical Sports Club of Budapest Technical University.

The aircraft will be shipped by steamer across the South Atlantic and the men will fly "north through South and Central America," it was said.

Roosevelt Cuts Slate to Bare Essentials

Tells Majority Chiefs To Drop All Bills For Big Spending

By Cecil B. Dickson.

(Copyright, 1939, by International News Service)

President Roosevelt yesterday told his Democratic leaders to drop consideration of all but essential legislation and work for adjournment of Congress early in June.

Mr. Roosevelt made known his wishes at his final White House conference with Senate and House chieftains before his departure tomorrow for two weeks at Warm Springs, Ga.

His program calls for blocking efforts to revise the national labor relations act and for scuttling of the Harrison public school assistance bill, the Wagner public health measure and new slum clearance legislation. All other bills authorizing "big spending" were described as "out the window."

Against New Taxes

The longer Congress is in session, the more likelihood additional spending bills will be passed and that is the reason for the President's drive for early adjournment, Democratic chieftains disclosed.

Mr. Roosevelt told party leaders he wants to avoid new taxes and avert revision of the present corporate tax laws at this session. He prefers, it was learned, that Congress continue some $750,000,000 in expiring nuisance levies and the present corporate taxes for two years by a simple resolution.

He made it clear his business appeasement program on taxes would be limited to abandonment of the scheduled 50 per cent increase in payroll taxes under the social security system. This will save corporations around $300,000,000 in 1940, it has been estimated.

Urges Neutrality action

Mr. Roosevelt also urged drastic modification or outright repeal of the neutrality act, holding that it failed as an instrument of peace and interfered with the Government's foreign policy. Strategy was discussed. It was decided the Senate should act first on neutrality, since the House is busy with appropriation and relief bills.

Little opposition to the proposal to insert $250,000,000 in the $1,067,000,000 Agriculture Department supply bill for farm parity paymentts was voiced by the President, despite his failure to include it in the budget. One conferee said Mr. Roosevelt said Congress was trying to break the Treasury but indicated he would defer asking new taxes unless forced to do so.

Conferees Agree on Reorganization

Retain Amendment Forbidding President To Abolish Functions

Senate leaders yesterday made plans for speedy final action on the Government reorganization bill after the conference committee of the House and Senate had agreed on all controversial points.

Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, Democratic leader, announced that the conference report, filed with the Senate yesterday, would be called up today. He was confident the report would be approved without much discussion.

Senate Victorious

The Senate was victorious in the conference committee on the main point in dispute when the O'Mahoney amendment prohibiting abolition by the President of functions of reorganized agencies was retained.

The President will be given authority to abolish agencies—unless both branches of Congress disapprove his plans within 60 days after they are made public—but he can do this only by transferring their functions to other departments or bureaus. In effect, therefore, his power will be confined to regrouping agencies.

The conferees retained the amendment offered by Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, laying down a policy of Government economy, owing to continued heavy deficits, and asserting that savings could be effected through reorganization.

As agreed upon in conference, the bill lacks many of the controversial features which caused similar legislation to fail at the last session.

The bill makes definite concessions to those who want to make sure that resolutions disapproving particular reorganization plans will have a chance of passage.

If a committee fails to act on usch a resolution within 10 days, a motion to discharge will be in order. The conferes agred to limit debate on such motions to one hour as contrasted with two hours in the Senate bill and 20 minutes in the House bill.

Debate Limited

Debate on the resolution itself would be limited to 10 hours, as provided in the bill passed by the House, instead of 20 hours, the limit fixed by the Senate.

The conferees retained Senate provisions adding the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Mississippi River Commission to the group of agencies exempt from reorganization.

If the Senate approves the conference report today, as anticipated, it will go immediately to the House. Approval by that body will send it to the White House for the President's signature.

Representative Taber (Republican), of New York, a member of the House conference group, said he would not sign the report because it would be impossible to effect economies under the bill as agreed upon in conference.

Senate Committee Approves H. E. Kalodner For Judge of U. S. Court in Pennsylvania

By International News Service.

The nomination of Harry E. Kalodner as judge of the United States District Court for Eastern Pennsylvania was approved yesterday by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

KALODNER

The approval was not unanimous, Senator Ashurst (Democrat), of Arizona, chairman, declared following the meeting. "Some Senators intend to continue their investigations, and reserved the right to oppose the nomination when it reaches the Senate floor. Some of the Senators are still not quite satisfied with some of the justice's actions," he said.

A judiciary subcommittee, headed by Senator Hughes (Democrat), of Delaware, cleared Kalodner, serving a recess appointment, of implication in an alleged "sale" of legislation while acting as secretary to former Gov. Earle of Pennsylvania.

The Senate Judiciary Committee reported favorably a bill providing that the statute of limitations shall not apply to murder. Chairman Ashurst said there has been some doubt whether the statute applied in capital cases and that he introduced the measure to settle this doubt permanently.

Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, announced the Senate sub-committee on banking and currency, will likely draft its report this week, opposing extension of President Roosevelt's power to devalue the dollar, but approving continued operation of the $2,000,000,000 exchange stabilization fund, and continuation of the domestic silver coinage policy.

He said current sentiment of the sub-committee indicated such would be the content of the report.

Wagner Act Hearing May Be Set Today

Senators Favor Revision Move as Labor Impasse Holds

With labor peace negotiators deadlocked, members of the Senate Education and Labor Committee yesterday predicted the committee would fix a date today for hearing on proposed changes in the Wagner labor act.

Some committee members who thus far have favored postponement were intent on going ahead, due to failure of peace negotiators to make any noticeable progress and renewed demands for modification of the act.

A contributing factor of great importance in the growing demand for modification was the decision yesterday of the District Court of Appeals, in the case involving H. Zirkin & Sons, Inc., local fur shop, holding that the courts have no authority, under the Wagner act as it stands, to step in to protect an employer "caught between the upper and nether millstones of disputing unions."

Senators who are insisting that Congress shall not adjourn without passing legislation changing the act pointed to the decision as a telling argument in support of their views.

Intervention by President Roosevelt to try to break the deadlock in peace negotiations between the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations was predicted, meanwhile, in some quarters.

Another meeting of the negotiations has been set for Thursday night at the Biltmore Hotel, New York.

If the impasse appears hopeless, it is understood, the negotiators will inform the President of the situation. Since he called them together, indications are that they are expected to report to him the result of the conferences. It then will be up to the President to take whatever action promises to be effective.

"Fireside Chat" Urged

Some of those anxious for labor harmony want the President to make a "fireside chat" on the subject. Thus far, however, the President has made no plans for a radio address.

One of the reports circulated yesterday was that John L. Lewis, head of the C. I. O., would resign as a peace gesture. Doubt was expressed, however, whether Lewis would resign unless William Green resigned as A. F. of L. president. Lewis once offered to resign on condition that Green also would step down.

The Senate Education and Labor Committee on two successive Tuesdays has postponed setting a date for hearings on bills proposing changes in the Wagner act. Postponement was for the purpose of giving peace negotiators time to get together.

Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, was responsible for the postponement one week ago. A check-up yesterday, however, disclosed that a majority of the committee was in a mood to proceed. Senator Ellender (Democrat), of Louisiana, who at one time favored postponement to aid the peace negotiations, said:

"I intend to make a motion that the committee fix a date for hearings. I am willing to give the negotiators two more weeks, but I think we ought to fix a date now."

A. F. L. Insists

The A. F. of L. has insisted that hearings on amendments which it has proposed go forward.

The decision of the District Court of Appeals, which was divided two to one in the Zirkin case, was handed down by Justice Harold M. Stephens, recently prominently mentioned as a possible Supreme Court appointee. With Justice Henry White Edgerton concurring, Stephens emphasized that the only remedy in a case where an employer's business was injured by labor union rivalry, lay in amendment of the Wagner act to permit the employer to call in the National Labor Relations Board to settle the dispute.

One of the changes proposed by the A. F. of L. would enable employers to order an election by the NLRB to ascertain what union represented a majority of his employes.

The court ordered the District court to dissolve an injunction restraining the Fur Workers' Union, No. 72, a C. I. O. organization, from picketing Zirkin's. The latter had signed a contract with the A. F. of L. fur workers' union. Members of the C. I. O. union, however, insisted that the A. F. of L. union was company dominated.

The A. F. of L. yesterday announced it had received overtures from 12 C. I. O. office workers' locals which were "dissillusioned with the C. I. O." and wanted to return to the A. F. of L. Frank Weikel, president of the International Council of Office Workers, announced they would be welcomed back.

In the House, Representative Anderson (Democrat), of Missouri, announced he would start circulating a petition to order up from the Labor Committee his bill which would drastically revise the Wagner act. If 218 members sign the petition the bill will be taken from the committee for floor consideration.

Ellender Will Hear Witnesses On U. S. Agency 'Czars' Today

Civil Service Official Asks Audit Power To Check 'Abuses'

Senator Ellender (Democrat), of Louisiana, opening his investigation yesterday of "petty czarism" in the Federal service, was told by Civil Service Commissioner Samuel H. Ordway that he could do a service to the merit system by implementing personnel divisions in various bureaus and agencies.

Ordway, who appeared with Commissioners Harry B. Mitchell and Mrs. Lucille Foster McMillin, as first witnesses before the special committee, told Ellender that proper personnel management might obviate the need for any elaborate system of appeals for employe grievances.

He and the other two commissioners said they had personally heard very few complaints from employes, but had heard much about complaints and were agreed that some system of appeals or conciliation is needed. Ordway added his belief that most complaints can be scotched at the starting point.

Specific Complaints Today

Ellender said that he would bring witnesses with specific complaints to the stand at 2 p. m. today. He opened the hearing, in room 357, Senate Office Building, with the declaration that his committee's power would be wielded against any "bureaucrat" who attempts reprisals against employe witnesses.

Protection of witnesses against reprisals has been promised him by department heads and Cabinet officers from "Cordell Hull to Secretary UUerkins," he said. He was especially innterested in the question of promotions and how some "favored" employes are jumped from grade to grade without any demonstration of merit.

Previously, Ellender had said that many promotions are based on a girl's pretty face or the influence a man can muster. Yesterday, however, he said he would not deal with petty cases, but would stress fundamental matters.

Asks Power of Audit

Ordway, admitting, with other commissioners, that abuses occur in the service, said the commission should have the power of audit over employe pay rolls, at "teeth" to prevent abuses. He said it would be inexpensive, and that the Civicl Service Commission has no facilities for a court of appeals within itself.

The three Commissioners agreed that the cause of most complaints by employes was lack of promotion, sometimes slowness of salary increases and perhaps a personal dislike for supervisors. Ellender asked what could be done about a supervisor who wilfully persecuted employes and was told by Commissioner Mitchell that the supervisor could be discharged.

Secret Folders Upheld

Ellender read a clipping from The Post concerning "secret personnel folders." The quoted article said that persons can bring charges against employes and these charges are placed in the folders against the employes' records without their having a chance to reply. Ordway said this system was not as dangerous as some might think. The Commission has traditionally held in favor of the secret folders.

Ellender observed that there seemed to have been some improvement in personnel management, or in plans for management, since his Committee was authorized a year ago. Ordway said there would be enough credit for everyone after the perfected system of management—contemplate in the June 24 executive orders—began to work.

3 Housewives, 9 Men Seated Tentatively on Rhodes Jury

Searching Questioning Sifts Panel for Trial of Building and Loan Official Accused of Submitting False Reports

Three housewives and nine men yesterday were impaneled tentatively to try Fred J. Rhodes for perjury in connection with alleged mismanagement of the Fidelity Building and Loan Association which collapsed with a $700,000 loss to depositors.

The prospective jurors were seated after hours of searching questioning by Assistant District Attorney Wilson, the prosecutor, and Defense Counsel William E. Richardson and William E. Leahy.

Juries twice were deadlocked trying Rhodes for forgery. The case now on trial involves two charges that he swore to false reports to the Treasury on condition of the association.

The prospective jurors are:
George R. Lindsay, 32, clerk, 5061 Conduit road northwest; Edward W. Howard, 51, meat cutter, 1940 Thirty-fifth street northwest; Mrs. Grace H. Barber, 51, 1407 Kennedy street northwest; F. Latimer Barkley, 39, real estate man, Warren street northwest; Ernest J. Behm, 49, Treasury clerk, 3601 Albemarle street northwest; Mrs. Sarah S. Commemorate Memory of Late Bishop

Washington Cathedral Joins World Tribute to Bishop Brent

Canon Stokes Reads Letter From Archbishop of Canterbury Lauding Service Of Canadian-Born Cleric in Philippines

Washington Cathedral yesterday joined in a world-wide commemorative exercises marking the tenth anniversary of the death of Bishop Charles Henry Brent, first Episcopal bishop of the Philippines. At Lausanne, Switzerland, where the famed prelate is buried, a wreath was placed on his grave.

"Bishop Brent was a servant of God, a friend of humanity and an apostle of Christian unity," declared Canon Anson Phelps Stokes, speaking at rites here. The canon read a message from the Archbishop of Canterbury, which said: "No one appreciates more fully the great contribution which Bishop Brent made to the life of the church in his day."

Reviewing the late ecclesiastic's work among the native Moros of the Philippines and in fighting the opium traffic, Canon Stokes revealed Bishop Brent once had been urged to become bishop of the Washington Diocese, but had felt his duties in the islands would not permit it.

Canon Stokes added the bishop preached the sermon here at laying of the cornerstone of Bethlehem Chapel in 1910. A special prayer was offered for the late bishop and several of his favorite meditations were read.

Among those participating in exercises were Alanson B. Houghton, former Ambassador to Germany and England and president of the Bishop Brent International Memorial Committee; Mrs. Bayard Cutting and Charles F. R. Ogilby, members of the executive committee, and Canon Precentor William Bradner.

A native of Canada, Bishop Brent served in Buffalo as deacon and priest and then spent a decade in Boston. From 1901 to 1918 he served as missionary bishop to the Philippines and later as Army chaplain. He also was bishop of western New York.

Suppression Of Central's Paper Denied

Issue Recalled Because Of Marian Anderson Editorial, Lawyer Says

Charges that the appearance of an editorial on the Marian Anderson case in the Central Bulletin, newspaper of Central High School, had caused officials of the school to call back the issue and reprint it without the tditorial were denied by Lawrence G. Hoover, principal.

Urging that Marian Anderson be permitted to sing in the high school auditorium, the editorial had said, "Let us hope it (the Board of Education) does reconsider and do Central the honor of playing host to one of the musical world's greatest artists, as well as prove to the rest of the world that this country holds no grudges because of race or color."

Charles H. Houston, Washington attorney, made its charge Sunday afternoon at a protest meeting.

Denying that the paper had been suppressed, Hoover yesterday explained that page proofs were shown to the assistant principal before publication, in accordance with a policy "recently adopted" at the school. The Marian Anderson editorial was ordered deleted, Hoover said, because "it seemed inappropriate for one of our students to criticize the Board of Education."

Later he continued, some one in the print shop must have "surreptitiously" run off a copy or copies of the paper containing the suppressed editorial, and such a copy must have come into Houston's possession.

Houston announced he was drafting a letter to Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt commending her for her action in resigning from the Daughters of the American Revolution as a protest against the organization's refusal to permit Marian Anderson to sing in Constitution Hall. The letter would be sent to Mrs. Roosevelt in a few days, he said.

A further letter will be sent to Representative McGranery (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, asking him to introduce a resolution in the House to investigate the Marian Anderson case, Houston said. In a letter read to the protest meeting McGranery had explained that Miss Anderson and her family were residents of his congressional district, and offered to introduce the resolution if the Marian Anderson Citizens Committee thought it "proper."

Plaque Unveiled Honoring Memory Of Young Caldwell

A plaque in memory of Millard F. Caldwell 3d, son of Representative Millard F. Caldwell (Democrat), of Florida, killed by a hit-and-run driver on February 3, was unveiled yesterday in the Pages School in the Capitol.

Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, and Representative Cox, (Democrat), of Georgia, who had appointed the 12-year-old boy a page, eulogized him. Both spoke highly of his "noble qualities and sense of responsibility."

The plaque, for which the pages contributed, reads: "In memory of Millard F. Caldwell 3d, June 5, 1926—February 3, 1939. Page, House of Representatives. 'Felled in line of duty.'"

Ernest L. Kendall, principal of the pages' school, conducted the ceremonies, and Richard Gibson, eighth-grade teacher, said a prayer.

Text of Supreme Court Ruling Upholding States' Rights to Tax U. S. Employes

The Supreme Court decision, delivered by Justice Stone in the New York income tax case follows:

We are asked to decide whether the imposition by the State of New York of an income tax on the salary of an employe of the Home Owners Loan Corporation places an unconstitutional burden upon the Federal Government.

Respondent, a resident of New York, was employed during 1934 as an examining attorney for the Home Owners Loan Corporation at an annual salary of $2,400. In his income tax return for that year he included his salary as subject to the New York State income tax imposed by Art. 16 of the tax law of New York (Consol. Laws, c. 60). Subdivision 2f of Sec. 359, since repealed, exempted from the tax "Salaries, wages and other compensation received from the United States of officials or employes thereof, including persons in the military or naval forces of the United States. . ." Petitioners, New York State tax commissioners, rejected respondent's claim for a refund of the tax based on the ground that his salary was constitutionally exempt from State taxation because the Home Owners Loan Corporation is an instrumentality of the United States Government and that he, during the taxable year, was an employe of the Federal Government engaged in the performance of a governmental function.

Action Set Aside

On review by certiorari the board's action was set aside by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York, 253 App. Div. 91, whose order was affirmed by the Court of Appeals. 278 N. Y. 221. Both courts held respondent's salary was free from tax on the authority of New York ex rel. Rogers vs. Graves, 299 U. S. 401, which sustained the claim that New York could not constitutionally tax the salary of an employe of the Panama Railroad Co., a wholly owned corporate instrumentality of the United States. We granted certiorari December 19, 1938, the constitutional question presented by the record being of public importance.

The Home Owners Loan Corporation was created pursuant to Sec. 4(a) of the Home Owners Loan Act of 1933, 48 Stat. 128, 12 U. S. C. Sec. 146 et seq., which was enacted to provide emergency relief to home owners, particularly to assist them with respect to home mortgage indebtedness. The corporation, which is authorized to lend money to home owners on mortgages and to refinance home mortgage loans within the purview of the Act, is declared by Sec. 4(a) to be an instrumentality of the United States. Its shares of stock are wholly Government-owned. Sec. 4(b). Its funds are deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and the compensation of its employes is paid by drafts upon the Treasury.

Held U. S. Action

For the purposes of this case we may assume that the creation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was a constitutional exercise of the powers of the Federal Government. Cf. Kay vs. United States, 303 U. S. 1. As that Government derives its authority wholly from powers delegated to it by the Constitution, its every action within its constitutional power is governmental action, and since Congress is made the sole judge of what powers within the constitutional grant are to be exercised, all activities of Government constitutionally authorized by Congress must stand on a parity with respect to their constitutional immunity from taxation. McCulloch vs. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 432; Van Brocklin vs. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 151, 158-159; South Carolina vs. United States, 199 U. S. 437, 451-452; Helvering vs. Gerhardt, 304 U. S. 405, 412-415. And when the National Government lawfully acts through a corporation which it owns and controls, those activities are governmental functions entitled to whatever tax immunity attaches to those functions when carried on by the Government itself through its departments. See McCulloch vs. Maryland, supra, 421-422; Smith vs. Kansas City Title Co., 225 U. S. 180, 208; Federal Land Bank vs. Crosland, 261 U. S. 374; New York ex rel. Rogers vs. Graves, supra.

The single question with which we are now concerned is whether the tax laid by the State upon the salary of respondent, employed by a corporate instrumentality of the Federal Government, imposes an unconstitutional burden upon that Government. The theory of the tax immunity of either Government, State or National, and its instrumentalities, from taxation by the other, has been rested upon an implied limitation on the taxing power of each, such as to forestall undue interference, through the exercise of that power, with the governmental activities of the other. That the two types of immunity may not, in all respects, stand on a parity has been recognized from the beginning. McCulloch v. Maryland, supra, 435-436, and possible differences in application deriving from differences in the source, nature and extent of the immunity of the governments and their agencies, were pointed out and discussed by this Court in detail during the last term. Helvering vs. Gerhardt, supra, 412-413, 416.

Congress Is Supreme

So far as now relevant, those differences have been thought to be traceable to the fact that the Federal Government is one of delegated powers in the exercise of which Congress is supreme; so that every agency which Congress can constitutionally create is a governmental agency. And since the power to create the agency includes the implied power to do whatever is needful or appropriate, if not expressly prohibited, to protect the agency, there has been attributed to Congress some scope, the limits of which it is not now necessary to define, for granting or withholding immunity of Federal agencies from State taxation. See Van Allen vs. The Assessors, 3 Wall. 573, 583, 585; Bank vs. Supervisors, 7 Wall. 26, 30, 31; Thomson v. Pacific Railroad, 9 Wall. 579, 588, 590; People vs. Weaver, 100 U. S. 539, 543; Mercantile Bank vs. New York, 121 U. S. 138, 154; Owensboro National Bank vs. Owensboro, 173 U. S. 664, 668; Shaw vs. Gibson-Zahniser Oil Corporation, 276 U. S. 575, 581; Oklahoma vs. Barnsdall Corporation, 296 U. S. 521, 525-526; Baltimore National Bank vs. State Tax Commission, 297 U. S. 209, 211-212; British-American Co. vs. Board, 299 U. S. 159; James vs. Dravo Contracting Co., 302 U. S. 134, 161; Helvering vs. Gerhardt, supra, 411, 412, 417; cf. United States vs. Bekins, 304 U. S. 27, 52. Whether its power to grant tax exemptions as an incident to the exercise of powers specifically granted by the Constitution can ever, in any circumstances, extend beyond the constitutional immunity of Federal agencies which courts have implied, is a question which need not now be determined.

Congress has declared in Sec. 4 of the act that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is an instrumentality of the United States and that its bonds are exempt, as to principal and interest, from Federal and State taxation, except surtaxes, estate, inheritance and gift taxes. The corporation itself, "including its franchise, its capital, reserves and surplus and its loans and income," is likewise exempted from taxation; its real property is subject to tax to the same extent as other real property. But Congress has given no intimation of any purpose either to grant or withhold immunity from State taxation of the salary of the corporation's employes, and the Congressional intention is not to be gathered from the statute by implication. Cf. Baltimore National Bank v. State Tax Commission, supra.

Discusses Immunity Claim

It is true that the silence of Congress, when it has authority to speak, may sometimes give rise to an implication as to the Congressional purpose. The nature and extent of that implication depend upon the nature of the Congressional power and the effect of its exercise. But there is little scope for the application of that doctrine to the tax immunity of Governmental instrumentalities. The constitutional immunity of either government from taxation by the other, where Congress is silent, has its source in an implied restriction upon the powers of the taxing government. So far as the implication rests upon the purpose to avoid interference with the functions of the taxed government or the imposition upon it of the economic burden of the tax, it is plain that there is no basis for implying a purpose of Congress to exempt the Federal Government or its agencies from tax burdens which are unsubstantial or which courts are unable to discern. Silence of Congress implies immunity no more than does the silence of the Constitution. It follows that when exemption from State taxation is claimed on the ground that the Federal Government is burdened by the tax, and Congress has disclosed no intention with respect to the claimed immunity, it is in order to consider the nature and effect of the alleged burden, and if it appears that there is no ground for implying a Constitutional immunity, there is equally a want of any ground for assuming any purpose on the part of Congress to create an immunity.

Nondiscriminatory Tax

The present tax is a nondiscriminatory tax on income applied to salaries at a specified rate. It is not in form or substance a tax upon the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or its property or income, nor is it paid by the corporation or the Government from their funds. It is laid upon income which becomes the property of the taxpayer when received as compensation for his services; and the tax laid upon the privilege of receiving it is paid from his private funds and not from the funds of the Government, either directly or indirectly. The theory, which once won a qualified approval, that a tax on income is legally or economically a tax on its source, is no longer tenable. New York ex rel. Cohn vs. Graves, 300 U. S. 308, 313, 314; Hale vs. State Board, 302 U. S. 95, 108; Helvering vs. Gerhardt, supra; cf. Metcalf & Eddy vs. Mitchell, 269 U. S. 514; Fox Film Corporation vs. Doyal, 286 U. S. 123; James vs. Dravo Contracting Co., supra, 149; Helvering vs. Mountain Producers Corporation, 303 U. S. 376, and the only possible basis for implying a constitutional immunity from State income tax of the salary of an employe of the National Government or of a governmental agency is that the economic burden of the tax is in some way passed on so as to impose a burden on the National Government tantamount to an interference by one government with the other in the performance of its functions.

In the four cases in which this court has held that the salary of an officer or employe of one government or its instrumentality was immune from taxation by the other, it was assumed, without discussion, that the immunity of a government or its instrumentality extends to the salaries of its officers and employes. This assumption, made with respect to the salary of a governmental officer in Dobbins vs. Commissioners of Erie County, 16 Pet. 435, and in Collector vs. Day, 11 Wall. 113, was later extended to confer immunity on income derived by a lessee from lands leased to him by the Government in the performance of a governmental function, Gillespie vs. Oklahoma, 257 U. S. 501; Burnet vs. Coronado Oil & Gas Co., 285 U. S. 393, and cases cited, although the claim of a like exemption from tax on the income of a contractor engaged in carrying out a Government project was rejected both in the case of a contractor with a State, Metcalf & Eddy vs. Mitchell, supra, and of a contractor with the National Government, James vs. Dravo Contracting Co., supra.

The ultimate repudiation in Helvering vs. Mountain Producers Corporation, supra, of the doctrine that a tax on the income of a lessee derived from a lease of government owned or controlled lands is a forbidden interference with the activities of the government concerned, led to the re-examination by this court, in the Gerhardt case, of the theory underlying the asserted immunity from taxation by one government of salaries of employes of the other. It was there pointed out that the implied immunity of one government and its agencies from taxation by the other should, as a principle of constitutional construction, be narrowly restricted. For the expansion of the immunity of the one government correspondingly curtails the soverign power of the other to tax, and where that immunity is invoked by the private citizen it tends to operate for his benefit at the expense of the taxing government and without corresponding benefit to the government in whose name the immunity is claimed. See Metcalf & Eddy vs. Mitchell, supra, 523,524; James vs. Dravo Contracting Co., supra, 156-158. It was further pointed out that, as applied to the taxation of salaries of the employes of one government, the purpose of the immunity was not to confer benefits on the employes by relieving them from contributing their share of the financial support of the other government, whose benefits they enjoy, or to give an advantage to that government by enabling it to engage employes at salaries lower than those paid for like services by other employers, public or private, but to prevent undue interference with the one government by imposing on it the tax burdens of the other.

Salaries Not Immune

In applying these controling principles in the Gerhardt case the Court held that the salaries of employes of the New York Port Authority, a State instrumentality created by New York and New Jersey, were not immune from Federal income tax, even though the Authority be regarded as not subject to Federal taxation. It was said that the taxpayers enjoyed the benefit and protection of the laws of the United States and were under a duty, common to all citizens, to contribute financial support to the Government; that the tax laid on their salaries and paid by them could be said to affect or burden their employer, the Port Authority, or the States creating it, only so far as the burden of the tax was economically passed on to the employer; that a nondiscriminatory tax laid on the income of all members of the community could not be assumed to obstruct the function which New York and New Jersey had undertaken to perform, or to cast an economic burden upon them, more than does the general taxation of property and income which, to some extent, incapable of measurement by economists, may tend to raise the price level of labor and materials. The Court concluded that the claimed immunity would do no more than relieve the taxpayers from the duty of financial support to the National Government in order to secure to the State a theoretical advantage, speculative in character and measurement and too unsubstantial to form the basis of an implied constitutional immunity from taxation.

Consider Situation Anew

The conclusion reached in the Gerhardt case that in terms of constitutional tax immunity a Federal income tax on the salary of an employe is not a prohibited burden on the employer makes it imperative that we should consider anew the immunity here claimed for the salary of an employe of a Federal instrumentality. As already indicated, such differences as there may be between the implied tax immunity of a State and the corresponding immunity of the National Government is one of delegated powers, in the exercise of which it is supreme. Whatever scope this may give to the National Government to claim immunity from State taxation of all instrumentalities which it may constitutionally create, and whatever authority Congress may possess as incidental to the exercise of its delegated powers to grant or withhold immunity from State taxation, Congress has not sought in this case to exercise such power. Hence these distinctions between the two types of immunity cannot affect the question with which we are now concerned. The burden on Government of a nondiscriminatory income tax applied to the salary of the employe of a government or its instrumentality is the same, whether a State or National Government is concerned. The determination in the Gerhardt case that the Federal income tax imposed on the employes of the Port Authority was not a burden on the Port Authority made it unnecessary to consider whether the authority itself was immune from Federal taxation; the claimed immunity failed because even if the Port Authority were itself immune from Federal income tax, the tax upon the income of its employes cast upon it no unconstitutional burden.

Assuming, as we do, that the Home Owners Loan Corporation is clothed with the same immunity from State taxation as the Government itself, we cannot say that the present tax on the income of its employes lays any unconstitutional burden upon it. All the reasons for refusing to imply a constitutional prohibition of Federal income taxation of salaries of State employes, stated at length in the Gerhardt case, are of equal force when immunity is claimed from State income tax on salaries paid by the National Government or its agencies. In this respect we perceive no basis for a difference in result whether the taxed income be salary or some other form of compensation, or whether the taxpayer be an employe or an officer of either a State or the National Government, or of its instrumentalities. In no case is there basis for the assumption that any such tangible or certain economic burden is imposed on the Government concerned as would justify a court's declaring that the taxpayer is clothed with the implied constitutional tax immunity of the Government by which he is employed. That assumption made in Collector vs. Day, supra, and in New York ex rel. Rogers vs. Graves, supra, is contrary to the reasoning and to the conclusions reached in the Gerhardt case and in Metcalf & Eddy vs. Mitchell, supra; Group No. 1 Oil Corporation vs. Bass, 283 U. S. 279; James vs. Dravo Contracting Co., supra; Helvering vs. Mountain Producers Corp., supra; McLoughlin vs. Commissioner, 303 U. S. 218. In their light the assumption can no longer be made. Collector vs. Day, supra, and New York ex rel. Rogers vs. Graves, supra, are overruled so far as they recognize an implied constitutional immunity from income taxation of the salaries of officers or employes of the national or a State Government or their instrumentalities.

Would Restrict Tax Power

So much of the burden of a nondiscriminatory general tax upon the incomes of employes of a Government, State or national, as may be passed on economically to that Government, through the effect of the tax on the price level of labor or materials, is but the normal incident of the organization within the same territory of two Governments, each possessing the taxing power. The burden, so far as it can be said to exist or to affect the Government in any indirect or incidental way, is one which the Constitution presupposes, and hence it cannot rightly be deemed to be within an implied restriction upon the taxing power of the national and State Governments which the Constitution has expressly granted to one and has confirmed to the other. The immunity is not one to be implied from the Constitution, because if allowed it would impose to an inadmissible extent a restriction on the taxing power which the Constitution has reserved to the State Governments. Reversed.

Mr. Chief Justice Hughes concurs in the result.

Court Lifts Bar to Reciprocal Taxation of Federal, State Pay

The opinion of Justice Frankfurter, concurring in the majority decision in the New York income tax case follows:

I join in the court's opinion but deem it appropriate to add a few remarks. The volume of the court's business has long since made impossible the early healthy practice whereby the justices gave expression to individual opinions. But the old tradition still has relevance when an important shift in constitutional doctrine is announced after a reconstruction in the membership of the court. Such shifts of opinion should not derive from mere private judgment. They must be duly mindful of the necessary demands of continuity in civilized society. A reversal of a long current of decisions can be justified only if rooted in the Constitution itself as an historic document designed for a developing Nation.

For 120 years this court has been concerned with claims of immunity from taxes imposed by one authority in our dual system of government because of the taxpayer's relation to the other. The basis for the court's intervention in this field has not been any explicit provision of the Constitution. The States, after they formed the Union, continued to have the same range of taxing power which they had before, barring only duties affecting exports, imports, and on tonnage. Congress, on the other hand, to lay taxes in order "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States," Article I, Section 8, can reach every person and every dollar in the land with due regard to constitutional limitations as to the method of laying taxes. But, as is true of other great activities of the State and national governments, the fact that we are a federalism raises problems regarding these vital powers of taxation. Since two governments have authority within the same territory, neither through its power to tax can be allowed to cripple the operations of the other. Therefore State and Federal governments must avoid exactions which discriminate against each other or obviously interfere with one another's operations. These were the determining considerations that led the great Chief Justice to strike down the Maryland statute as an unambiguous measure of discrimination against the use by the United States of the Bank of the United States as one of its instruments of government.

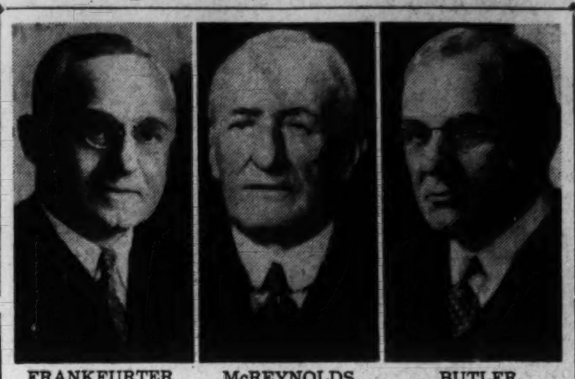
Cites Arguments

The arguments upon which McCulloch vs. Maryland, 4 Wheat, 316, rested had their roots in actuality. But they have been distorted by sterile refinements unrelated to affairs. These refinements derived authority from an unfortunate remark in the opinion in McCulloch vs. Maryland. Partly as a flourish of rhetoric and partly because the intellectual fashion of the times indulged a free use of absolutes, Chief Justice Marshall gave currency to the phrase that "the power to tax involves the power to destroy." Id., at p. 431. This dictum was treated as though it were a constitutional mandate. But not without protest. One of the most trenchant minds on the Marshall court, Justice William Johnson, early analyzed the dangerous inroads upon the political freedom of the States and the Union within their respective orbits resulting from a doctrinaire application of the generalities uttered in the course of the opinion in McCulloch vs. Maryland. The seductive cliche that the power to tax involves the power to destroy was fused with another assumption, likewise not to be found in the Constitution itself, namely the doctrine that the immunities are correlative—because the existence of the National Government implies immunities from State taxation, the existence of State governments implies equivalent immunities from Federal taxation. When this doctrine was first applied Mr. Justice Bradley registered a powerful dissent, the force of which gathered rather than lost strength with time. Collector vs. Day, 11 Wall. 113, 128.

Justice Holmes Dissents

All these doctrines of intergovernmental immunity have until recently been moving in the realm of what Lincoln called "pernicious abstractions." The web of unreality spun from Marshall's famous dictum was brushed away by one stroke of Mr. Holmes' pen: "The power to tax is not the power to destroy while this Court sits." Panhandle Oil Co. vs. Mississippi, 277 U. S. 218, 223 (dissent). Failure to exempt public functionaries from the universal duties of citizenship to pay for the costs of government was hypothetically transmuted into hostile action of one government against the other. A succession of decisions thereby withdrew from the taxing power of the States and Nation a very considerable range of wealth without regard to the actual workings of our federalism and this, too, when the financial needs of all governments began steadily to mount. These decisions have encountered increasing dissent. In view of the powerful pull of our decisions upon the courts charged with maintaining the constitutional equilibrium of the two other great English federalisms, the Canadian and the Australian courts were at first inclined to follow the earlier doctrines of this Court regarding intergovernmental immunity. Both the Supreme Court of Canada and the High Court of Australia on fuller consideration—and for the present purposes the British North America act, 30 and 31, Vict., c. 3, and the Commonwealth of Australian constitution act, 63 and 64 Vict., c. 12, raise the same legal issues as does our Constitution — have completely rejected the doctrine of intergovernmental immunity. In this Court dissents have gradually become majority opinions, and even before the present decision the rationale of the doctrine had been undermined.

The judicial history of this doctrine of immunity is a striking illustration of an occasional tendency to encrust unwarranted interpretations upon the Constitution and thereafter to consider merely what has been judicially said about the Constitution, rather than to be primarily controlled by a fair conception of the Constitution. Judicial exegesis is unavoidable with reference to an organic act like our Constitution, drawn in many particulars with purposed vagueness so as to leave room for the unfolding future. But the ultimate touchstone of constitutionality is the Constitution itself and not what we have said about it. Neither Dobbins vs. Commissioners, 16 Pet. 435, and its offspring, nor Collector vs. Day, supra, and its, can stand appeal to the Constitution and its historic purposes. Since both are the starting points of an interdependent doctrine, both should be, as I assume them to be, overruled this day. Whether Congress may, by express legislation, relieve its functionaries from their civic obligations to pay for the benefits of the State governments under which they live is matter for another day.



FRANKFURTER McREYNOLDS BUTLER

Justice Butler's Dissent

The dissenting opinion delivered by Justice Butler follows:

Mr. Justice McReynolds and I are of the opinion that the Home Owners Loan Corporation, being an instrumentality of the United States heretofore deemed immune from State taxation, "it necessarily results," as held in New York ex rel, Rogers v. Graves (1937) 299 U. S. 401, "that fixed salaries and compensation paid to its officers and employes in their capacity as such are likewise immune;" and that the judgment of the State court, unquestionably required by that decision, should be affirmed.

From the decision just announced, it is clear that the court has overruled Dobbins vs. The Commissioners of Erie County (1842) 16 Pet. 435, Collector vs. Day (1871) 11 Wall. 113, New York ex rel. Rogers vs. Graves, supra, and Brush vs. Commissioner (1937) 300 U. S. 352. Thus now it appears that the United States has always had power to tax salaries of State officers and employes and that similarly free have been the States to tax salaries of officers and employes of the United States. The compensation for past as well as for future service to be taxed and the rates prescribed in the exertion of the newly disclosed power depend on legislative discretion not subject to judicial revision. Futile indeed are the vague intimations that this court may protest against excessive or destructive taxation. Where the power to tax exists, legislatures may exert it to destroy, to discourage to protect or exclusively for the purpose of raising revenue. See e.g. Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, 8 Wall. 533, 548; McCray vs. United States, 195 U. S. 27, 53, et seq.; Magnano Co. vs. Hamilton, 292 U. S. 40, 44 et seq.; Cincinnati Soap Co. vs. United States, 301 U. S. 308.

Appraisal of lurking or apparent implications of the court's opinion can serve no useful end for, should occasion arise, they may be ignored or given direction differing from that at first seemingly intended. But safely it may be said that presently marked for destruction is the doctrine of reciprocal immunity that by recent decisions here has been so much impaired.

Court Voids New Jersey Gangster Act

Douglas Fairbanks Denied Appeal From $102,186 Tax Levy

In addition to its decisions yesterday on State taxation of Federal employes' salaries the Supreme Court also:

Unanimously declared unconstitutional the "gangster act" of New Jersey, under which any person known to be a member of a "gang" of two or more persons, and who has been previously convicted of a crime, can be sent to prison for 20 years.

Rejected a motion challenging legality of the appointment to the Supreme Court of Justice Black, filed by a Chicago lawyer on the ground Black, while a member of the Senate, voted to increase retirement benefits of justices.

Douglas Fairbanks Loses

Denied an appeal by Douglas Fairbanks, movie producer and actor, to escape payment of $102,186 in Federal tax assessments and interest, growing out of a motion picture bond issue of a decade ago.

Denied a review for three International Fur Workers Union officials, convicted by a Federal court of conspiring to violate the Sherman antitrust law in New York, and each sentenced to ten months in jail.

Granted a review on constitutionality of the milk marketing agreement provisions of the agricultural adjustment act, asked in three appeals impinging upon the Federal-State milk marketing agreements in the New York and Boston areas. Arguments were ordered for April 24.

Strecker Decision Delayed

Refused to review constitutionality of the Minkoff law of 1938, which restricts the right of landowners in New York tenement houses subdivided in violation of law.

The tribunal failed to hand down expected decisions in the Strecker case, testing right of the Government to deport alien Communists, and in the appeal of Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City, N. J., and several associates against a third circuit court injunction restraining them from interfering with exercise of free speech and free assembly.

It did, however, grant a hearing in the appeal of an Indiana corporation, Ziffrin, Inc., which attacked constitutionality of a Kentucky law under which it claimed it was denied a truck permit for transportation of liquor.

The court declined to set aside conviction of Gerrit W. Clason, of Elkhart, Ind., for transportating a dead animal in interstate commerce.

The New Jersey gangster law was held to be "repugnant to the due process of the fourteenth amendment."

Conviction of 3 Reversed

The court reversed the conviction of Ignatius Lanzetta, Michael Falcone and Louie Del Rossi, sentenced to 5 to 10 years under the law's designation of a gangster as "Any person not engaged in any lawful occupation, known to be a member of any gang, consisting of two or more persons, who has been convicted of any crime in this or in any other State."

Justice Butler, who wrote the opinion, said the court had been unable to find any other statute "attempting to make it criminal to be a member of a 'gang.'"

He added that a statute "which either forbids or requires the doing of an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application, violates the first essential of due process of law."

Income Ruling Raises D. C. Revenue Issue

Morgan

District chapter of the National Lawyers Guild, said the action corroborated the guild's brief in support of an income tax, as submitted to the ctiizens' advisory committee on taxation last December. He said the ruling removed all excuse for a District sales tax.

District officials expressed doubt that an income tax could be applied by the District to Government officials who are appointed or elected for a definite period of time. This, it was pointed out, would exempt Congressmen, the President and Cabinet officers. Only exception seen was that an income tax could be applied to persons who were living in the District at the time of appointment.

In citing the problem of double taxation, officials pointed out a recent tax appeals decision had required a man who had lived in the District 20 years to pay the intangible property tax, even though he had maintained voting residence in Massachusetts during that period. In this situation, it was suggested, the District would have the right to levy the full amount of an income tax, regardless of the fact that a tax might have been paid to another State.

Amendment Needed

In Richmond, the Associated Press reported, State officials said action of the General Assembly appeared to be necessary before Virginia could extend its income-tax levies to Federal workers. The Virginia tax code, in defining the term gross income, now states that it shall not include "salaries, wages or other compensation received from the United States by officers or employes thereof, and pensions received from the United States or this State."

As for levying the Federal income tax against State employes, it was explained here that the Treasury Department informed State and local Government employes shortly before March 15 that they would not have to file Federal income-tax returns. J. H. Bradford, chief of the records and accounts section of the Virginia budget division, said he could not estimate how many State employes might have incomes large enough to make them subject to the Federal tax. With State and local government employes included, however, it appeared the Federal Treasury would stand to reap a greater return from Virginia than the Commonwealth would from taxing incomes of Federal workers in the State.

Joseph O'C. McCusker, chief deputy comptroller for Maryland, told the Associated Press no records were available on which to base an estimate of how much revenue would come in from taxing Federal employes. He said the Maryland income tax law, does not specifically exempt Federal employes, but constitutional exemption had barred the State from collecting the tax of one-half of 1 per cent.

Court Lifts Barriers To Reciprocal Taxation

and Federal Governments must avoid exactions which discriminate against each other or obviously interfere with one another's operations." But Frankfurter said this doctrine, laid down in the famous McCulloch versus Maryland decision, "have been distorted by sterile refinements unrelated to affairs."

Justice Frankfurter traced a gradual broadening of the principle of intergovernmental immunity to Chief Justice Marshall's phrase that "the power to tax involves the power to destroy." This, he said, was used by Marshall "partly as a flourish of rhetoric and partly because the intellectual fashion of the times indulged a free use of absolutes."

"This dictum was treated as though it were a constitutional mandate," said Frankfurter.

Justice Stone in his majority opinion said that granting the Home Owners Loan Corporation the same immunity from State taxation as the Government itself, "we cannot say that the present tax on the income of its employes lays any unconstitutional burden upon it."

No Basis for Immunity

"In no case is there basis for the assumption that any such tangible or certain economic burden is imposed on the Government concerned as would justify a court's declaring that the taxpayer is clothed with the implied constitutional tax immunity of the government by which he is employed," ruled Stone.

Stone specifically overruled two Supreme Court decisions, Rogers vs. Graves, and Collector vs. Day, which recognized constitutional immunity of National and State employes from reciprocal taxation, pointing out that in more recent decisions the court has gradually restricted this field of immunity.

Declares Sovereignty Curtailed

He said expansion of the immunity of one government correspondingly curtails the sovereign power of the other to tax, "and where that immunity is invoked by the private citizen it tends to operate for his benefit at the expense of the taxing government and without corresponding benefit to the government in whose name the benefit is claimed."

Stone cited the court's ruling last year in the New York Port Authority case, in which the court held that Federal taxation of employes of that State instrumentality was not a "prohibited burden." He declared arguments against immunity of State employes in that case apply with equal force in the case decided yesterday.

"In this respect we perceive no basis for a difference in result whether the taxed income be salary or some other form of compensation, or whether the taxpayer be an employe or an officer of either a State or the National Government, or of its instrumentalities," said Stone.

Case Started in 1934

The case resulted from a 1934 State tax return filed by James B. O'Keefe, HOLC examining attorney which included the salary paid him by the Federal agency. Claiming constitutional exemption, O'Keefe sought a refund, which the New York State tax commissioners rejected. Both the New York Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals overruled the tax commissioners and held O'Keefe's HOLC salary exempt from State taxation. The Supreme Court last December decided to determine the constitutional issue raised.

Concluding the prolonged controversy, which climaxed in a Presidential request for direct Congressional action removing reciprocal tax exemptions, Stone said:

"This immunity is not one to be implied from the Constitution, because if allowed it would impose to an inadmissible extent a restriction on the taxing power which the Constitution has reserved to the State governments."

Securities Still Immune

President Roosevelt had asked that tax immunity be removed from both official salaries and interest from Federal, State and local securities, but the securities provision was omitted from the bill which passed the House. Nor was the constitutionality of reciprocal Federal-State securities taxation determined in yesterday's court ruling.

The President told Congress in January that "tax immunities heretofore accorded to private income derived from Government securities or Government employment are not inexorable requirements of the Constitution, but are the result of judicial decision."

Apparently the only Federal employes whose salaries would be exempt from State taxation under yesterday's ruling are Federal judges themselves. Under the Constitution, their salaries may not be diminished while in office. Pending before the Supreme Court for decision is a case challenging constitutionality of a 1936 Congressional declaration that judges who took office after June 6, 1932, shall be subject to the Federal income tax.

33 States May Benefit

Immediate beneficiaries would be 33 States having State income tax laws, but some of these exempt Federal salaries. State and local employes would not be immediately affected, due to a Treasury announcement early this month that this group need not file 1938 Federal income tax returns.

While Congress is expected to act this session to prevent retroactive taxation of State and local officials, Federal employes residing in the States will not be assured of similar protection until each of the State Legislatures take similar steps.

D.C. Heads Ask Law For Permanent Parking Meters

Legislation to authorize the District Commissioners to install parking meters on a permanent basis was sent to Congress yesterday by city heads.

It is understood that 1,800 more meters will be installed immediately after the legislation is enacted. There are now 310 operating on an experimental basis.

"Installation of these meters has improved parking conditions in areas where they are located," the commissioners said.

Missing Merchant Clews Sought

Hagerstown, Md., March 27 (AP).—A Yarrowsburg resident will be questioned tomorrow by officers searching for James A. Martin, 43-year-old Yarrowsburg merchant, who has been missing a week.

Detective Capt. William H. Peters, who is assisting county officers in the search, did not disclose the name of the person he intends to question.

A widespread search for Martin, a World War veteran, was made by youths of the CCC camp at Boonsboro, but they found no trace of him in the nearby mountains. Martin has not been seen since he locked his store about 10 p. m. last Monday.

Fair Tax Body Asks Levy on D. C. Incomes

Suggested Plan to Balance Budget Keeps $1.75 Realty Rate

A new plan for balancing the 1940 District budget without resort to a sales tax was released yesterday by the Citizens Committee for Fair Taxation as the House sub-committee on fiscal affairs prepared to conclude hearings on the $13,000,000 tax program today.

The citizens' committee offered a proposal to enact the 5 per cent corporate income tax and to retain all present taxes except the business privilege levy. At the same time, the committee suggested, however, that a graduated personal income tax be substituted for the intangible personal property tax.

The Federation of Citizens Associations last week offered a scheme to balance the 1940 budget by retaining present levies and adding $400,000 in public utility taxes.

Auditor Daniel J. Donovan contends that a balancing of next year's budget will meet an emergency without providing a perament tax system capable of expansion for future needs.

The tables prepared by the citizens' committee are based on retention of the $1.75 realty rate, which is due to revert to $1.50 July 1. The corporate net income tax would raise an estimated $2,700,000.

For the income tax, the committee renewed its proposal of a levy ranging from 1 to 7 per cent above the Federal exemptions of $1,000 for single persons and $2,500 for married couples.

Paul Stark Seeley Lectures Here on Christian Science

"Christian Science and the Kingdom of God" was the subject of a lecture delivered last night in First Church of Christ, Scientist, by Paul Stark Seeley, C. S. B., of Portland, Oreg. He was introduced by Mrs. Helen G. McNeill, second reader of First Church.

The lecturer said in part:

"So the kingdom of God is within you because it is eternally within reach of your consciousness . . .

"Your only real consciousness is an individual expression of deific consciousness, God . . . Jesus showed true thinking to be thinking that is ever conscious of the omnipresent God and His kingdom . . ."

Pay-Hour Chief Warns Against Dodging Law

'Don't Play With Fire,' Andrews Suggests To Manufacturers

By the Associated Press.

Atlanta, Ga., March 27.—Wage-Hour Administrator Elmer F. Andrews today suggested that manufacturers "don't play with fire" in the labor standards act.

He told Atlanta Rotarians the act "was and is broad social legislation designed to help all of us to a better, more prosperous and happier national life."

"I am well aware that the degree of help we may expect from it will depend upon the vigor with which it is enforced. Enforcement is our job."

Andrews reported at present "we are less interested in putting noncomplying manufacturers in jail, however, than in winning for the workers every benefit to which they are lawfully entitled."

He pointed out all interstate commerce from all States would bear alike the increase from the current 44-hour week, 25-cent-an-hour basic provisions in six years to 40 hours and 40 cents.

President Roosevelt spoke out at industrial Gainesville, Ga., a year ago, prior to enactment of the wage-hour bill, for higher pay scales in the lower South as an aid in establishing new industries.

"The purchasing power of the millions of Americans in this whole area is far too low," he said. "Most men and women who work for wages in this whole area get wages which are far too low."

WPA Ruling Issued

By International News Service.

Attorney General Murphy yesterday held the minimum 24-cents-an-hour wage provision of the fair labor standards act of 1938 applies only to certain classes of Works Progress Administration workers.

The minimum wage should be observed, he said, "only where that rate has been established for persons employed by private employers in any occupation, under the act, and where persons are employed by the WPA in similar occupations in the same locality."

President Roosevelt had asked the Attorney General's opinion in response to a query submitted by Col. F. C. Harrington, WPA administrator.

The fair labor act, Murphy stated, expressly provided certain exemptions, and made it clear "that the minimum wage is not prescribed for all possible classes of workers employed by the WPA any more than it is prescribed for all classes of workers employed by private industry."

Paris Wants Exact Terms From Italy

Daladier's Refusal To Talk With Duce Reportedly Supported

By the Associated Press.

Paris, March 28 (Tuesday).—Premier Daladier was reported without ojcial confirmation early today to have obtained support of a mapority of his cabinet in refusing to talk terms with Premier Mussolini until Italy states her exact claims on France.

Informed circles said the premier overruled a proposal by Foreign Minister Bonnet and four other ministers that France open negotiations with Il Duce on the basis of his speech Sunday.

[Reports in parliamentry circles last night indicated Foreign Minister Bonnet might resign in order to facilitate early negotiations between France and Italy on Mussolini's Mediterranean and North African demands, the United Press stated.

De Monzie Likely Successor

[Speculation over Bonnet's possible resignation was heightened when it was disclosed that he had conferred twice during the day with Public Works Minister De Monzie, who is regarded as likeliest to be his successor.

[De Monzie has excellent indirect contacts with Mussolini and influential friends in Rome. He has important roles in diplomatic relations between France and the Vatical.—Editor's note.]

Every effort was being made to keep Daladier's decision on the Italian question secret until his much-publicized speech Wednesday.

It was said by informed sources, however, he would say France refuses to negotiate with any nation under threat and is capable of defending her empire.

Claims Not Defined

In his speech Mussolini failed to define precisely Italy's claims, merely referring to French-ruled Tunisia, Djibouti and the Suez Canal as "problems."

The French government advanced a long step nearer full war-time footing yesterday, apparently strengthening her position for possible negotiations with Italy.

Five new decrees were issued in a cabinet meeting of more than three hours which considered Italian Premier Mussolini's indication Sunday the next move was up to France.

They were issued under the government's new dictatorial authority and were concerned primarily with the navy although one affected frontier defenses and another completed financial arrangements for industrial mobilization.

The full scope of the measures will not be known until they are published in the official journal, possibly today.

Naval Strength Increased

Although the strict new military censorship law effectively prevented seepage of details, it was known that the three naval decrees increased the fleet's fighting and technical manpower, changed the method of recruiting and revised the reserve organization from which the navy draws its wartime strength.

There were some reports that Premier Daladier would answer Mussolini in a broadcast Wednesday but it was also considered possible that he might reply through normal diplomatic channels in a note asking just wsat Italy wants. Mussolini merely named the "problems"—Djibouti, Tunisia and the Suez Canal.

Although Mussolini's speech was regarded in some quarters as an overture for peaceful settlement and, therefore, an important stride toward reconciliation, optimism was not unqualified. Il Duce, it was pointed out, still may ask what France steadfastly has insisted she cannot and wlil not grant, such as, for example, territorial concessions.

8 Robberies Laid To Youth, Netting Less Than $50

Five attempted safecrackings and three housebreakings, which netted less than $50, have been attributed to a youth of 21, held at the First Precinct police station.

He was arested early yesterday by Detectives Shipman, Saunders and Groves. The youth admitted the crimes, according to the arresting officers.

Burglaries charged against the boy are two attempts to enter a safe at the Julius Lansburgh Furnture Co., two attempts in the office of the Mutual Insurance Co., and an attempt at the Carow Wallpaper Co., 1000 H street northwest. Housebreakings were staged by the boy at restaurants in the 1400 block of I street northwest and the 800 block of Thirteenth street northwest.

The suspect also is believed responsible for breaking into a postoffice substation in the 1400 block of I street northwest early yesterday. The office was ransacked, but apparently nothing was stolen.

Fish Suggests $10,000,000 to Aid German Emigres

New York, March 27.—Representative Hamilton Fish, jr., speaking last night at the annual dinner of the Order Sons of Zion, said he would be willing to vote for a Congressional appropriation of $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 for transporting persecuted Jews of Europe to Palestine. Fish is ranking Republican member of the House committee on foreign affairs.

He pointed out that a bill to buy foodstuffs for starving women and children in Germany in 1923 was passed by the House by a 2 to 1 vote and that the United States had appropriated $20,000,000 for famine relief in Russia.

"We have plenty of precedents for helping destitute and starving people," he continued.

Revolution in Education Urged To Stem Insanity in Later Life

College of Physicians Told of Need For Putting Mental Brakes on Prodigies and Speeding Up Dullards

By the Associated Press.

New, Orleans, March 27.—A mental revolution to put the brakes on child prodigies and speed up subnormal youngsters was advocated today before the opening meeting of the American College of Physicians.

Both the dullard and the genius child is out of step with his or her environment, John M. Barclay, registrar of the Devereaux Schools at Berwyn, Pa., told the assembling 1,500 physicians, and the genius needs just as much adjustment and training as the child who never seems quite bright.

A new method of treating cancer of the blood with a precision never before possible also was described.

Grows Marrow in Test Tube

Dr. Edwin E. Osgood, of the University of Oregon Medical School, reported he had developed a process of growing human bone marrow in a test tube and treating it with X-rays or radium to determine exactly the dosage of radiation necessary to check the growth of leukemia, commonly known as blood cancer.

"Thousands of patients now in mental hospitals could undoubtedly have been spared that fate if their cases had been treated individually and intelligently when they were children," Dr. Barclay declared. More than half the hospital beds in the United States today are occupied by mental disease patients.

"What we glibly call 'insanity' is a disease arising from any one of a number of causes, a major one being the failure of parents, brothers, sisters, teachers," and, he added with emphasis, "grandmothers" to treat every child as an individual.

This does not mean that every child should be pampered and given his own way, Barclay declared, "but it does indicate that there is a necessity for a revolution in education. Approximately 40 per cent of all mal-adjusted cases are the result of birth injuries and another 40 per cent result from brain infections. Each child can and should be treated as a special problem for the educator."

Special Treatment for Children

The Devereaux school was organized for that purpose, he explained, and students attend group classes or work individually according to their particular needs. All of them, ranging in age from 3 to 23, have been selected because they were out of step with children in other schools. Their intelligence quotients range all the way from the subnormal of 75 to the geniuses of 150.

One example of the school's method proved profitable on a young boy who cared about nothing but building ship models. When it was pointed out to him that he could not build boats without technical knowledge, he accepted instruction in arithmetic, mechanical drawing, English, algebra and other subjects.

"We don't claim to have turned out any geniuses in science and invention by this method of education," Barclay said, "but we are sure that we have saved a lot of persons from spending the rest of their lives cutting out paper dolls."

Britain Maps Even Bigger Armament

Chamberlain Admits Revising Plans Made Only 18 Days Ago

London, March 27.—Reichsfuehrer Hitler's most recent challenges to European security are to be answered by Great Britain through still further increases in her military establishment—more arms, more men and more materials—in line with the warning issued yesterday by Premier Mussolini: "Woe to the Weak."

Prime Minister Chamberlain disclosed in the House of Commons today that despite announcement only 18 days ago of a substantial enlargement of the British army, the whole question of the size and efficiency of the dfns forcs alrady was being "reconsidered" in the light of changes in the European situation.

Announcement of the decision will be made "when we are ready," he indicated. Information from informed quarters shows increases are contemplated.

Richard Austen Butler, parliamentary undersecretary for foreign affairs, told Commons the government was not considering a boycott against Germany either independently or through the machinery of the League of Nations" with American co-operation." The Associated Press reported.

[A State Department official in Washington said there had been no exchanges of views between the United States and British governments concerning an economic boycott of Germany.—Editor's Note.]

Conscription, in a modified form, is being hotly debated by the press and pressure for its adoptino seems to be increasing. The government is known to be sharply divided on the issue, with Viscount Halifax and the ministers of the various fighting services urging adoption, and Sir John Simon and Sir Samuel Hoare in opposition. The position of Chamberlain is not yet clear.

Continued opposition of the Labor Party leadership to any form of draft is an important factor. Pointing to labor's position, Hoare and Simon assert conscription would split the country at a time when unity is a first essential.

In a speech here tonight, Alfred Duff Cooper, who resigned as first lord of the admiralty because of dissatisfaction with Chamberlain's appeasement policy, made a strong appeal for modified conscription.

At invitation of Gen. Maurice Gustave Gamelin, Lord Gort, chief of the imperial general staff, with a number of other high officers of the British fighting forces, will leave by air for Paris tomorrow to confer with French military leaders, inspect the Maginot Line and witness spring war games. Further co-ordination of the British and French military establishments is expected to result.

Rumania Seeks French, British Trade Treaties

Independence Intact Under Nazi Pact, Premier Asserts

By the United Press.

Bucharest, March 27.—Premier Calinescu today invited Great Britain, France and other nations to negotiate trade agreements with Rumania, which he insisted "preserves her full independence and freedom of action" under last week's economic treaty with Nazi Germany.

Calinescu, addressing King Carol's grand council in its first session, said the German pact in no way infringed upon Rumanian independence. He delivered a bitter attack upon Hungary, against whose alleged "menacing" military movements Rumania has put an estimated 500,000 troops into the field in recent days.

He revealed the sections of the Nazi treaty providing for German rearmament of Rumania, including the furnishing of warplanes and other equipment, would involve "important credits" from the Reich.

Heavy Sacrifices for People

Finance Minister Constantinescu said the new arms program would require heavy sacrifices from the Rumanian people.

The premier accused Hungary of "double-crossing" in connection with the Hungarian army's forceful annexation of Carpatho-Ukrainia (Ruthenia) where a Rumanian minority of about 20,000 lives just across the Rumanian northern border.

The premier's statements regarding the German-Rumanian trade pact were in sharp contrast with analyses of economic experts who said it meant Rumania had been drawn solidly into the Nazi orbit by committing nearly 90 per cent of her agricultural and mineral resources to the Reich and giving Germany domination over industrial development.

The nation's supreme economic council will meet soon to work out new projects under the accord.

The agreement, according to Calinesou's explanation, does not prejudice any future agreement with other countries, providing that it is nonpolitical and that "Rumania preserves her full freedom of action."

London, Paris 'Unreal' on Duce, Say Nazis

Claims Demand Action Even Though Not an Ultmatum, Is Opinion

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 27.—Government quarters declared today that Premier Mussolini's claims for Tunisia, Djibouti and the Suez Canal demand action by France despite the fact Il Duce did not issue an ultimatum in his speech yesterday mentioning these claims.

Dienst aus Deutschland, information service with excellent foreign office connections, said first reactions in London and Paris to Mussolini's talk were "unreal," and Deutsche Diplomatisch-Politische Korrespondenz, semiofficial foreign office mouthpiece, said 'it will be difficult' 'for France and Britain to remain unyielding to Italian demands.

Meanwhile Nazi leaders are going away on holidays after recent strenuous weeks of empire building.

Goebels to Budapest

Propaganda Minister Goebbels left Berlin tonight by train for Budapest, where a spokesman said he would make a brief stay and continue to Athens Thursday. He has spent previous holidays in Greece also.

(Germans in Budapest said Goebbels would visit there for "informal observations." Hungarian foreign office sources indicated the visit would be of private character.)

Chancellor Hitler is expected to rest at his Berchtgaden mountain home until Saturday, when he will go to Wilhelmshaven to attend launching of Germany's second 35,000-ton battleship, to be named the von Tirpitz.

Slovakia Worries Officials

Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop also intends to slip away for a few days, and Field Marshal Goering already is vacationing at San Remo, Italy.

More than one government department, meanwhile, is worried by the problem of how to put Slovakia on its feet economically and financially.

Officials who conferred last week with Slovak leaders Ferdinand Durcansky and Alois Tuka said they found Slovakia's administrative officialdom inexperienced as to how to run an "inlependent state."

Wants Some Czech Gold

As a result of the conferences Germany has concluded she must help Slovakia if the country is to live.

The problem is complicated by the fact that the Slovak government feels it should fall heir to a part of the assets of the Czecho-Slovak National Bank.

Whether Germany will turn over a large percentage of the gold and free exchange of the former tripartite republic seemed more than doubtful.

Meanwhile, McLellan Mayhugh, head of the Washington Cab Association, said plans were at a standstill for a meeting of cab officials and drivers to discuss new rates ordered by the F. U. C. The rates, providing a 10-cent increase in fares fo rall but the downtown zone, take effect Monday.

Seal Completes Plan to Permit Child Acting Here

An amendment to the District's child labor act to permit youthful actors to appear on Washington stages will be submitted to the commissioners today.

Corporation Counsel Seal said yesterday he had completed drafting the amendment which would permit child actors to take part in professional theater productions provided the board of education finds they are receiving adequate school work and are not working long hours.

The present regulation bars children under 14 from appearing in professional productions and limits children from 14 to 16 to daytime performances.

promise we shall have peace."

But the defense council's actions indicated peace negotiations had broken down.

Miaja Reported Fleeing

Reports spread that Gen. Jose Miaja, head of the Madrid Defense Council, had fled to Valencia, that nationalists would enter the besieged capital in a few days, that exit from the city already had been closed. None could be confirmed.

Several officials addressing the people on the radio indicated that peace negotiations had been at a standstill since Sunday night when they said defense measures were being taken against expected Nationalist offensives.

Those negotiations broke down, officials of the defense junta said, when the Nationalists in conversations last Thursday insisted upon delivery of the Republican air force by last Saturday.

The Republicans said this "token" surrender proved impossible because of the short time allowed, although nationalists' guarantees of treatment of all persons in republican territory except "criminals" and those "responsible for continuing the war" had proved satisfactory.

New Attacks Launched

Franco yesterday launched a new offensive south of Madrid after the defense junta had promised delivery of its air fleet today.

Despite these developments the defense junta had indicated early today it would continue to attempt to carry out its purpose—the obtaining of an "honorable peace."

The defense council's brief announcement tonight about civilians said it was expediting "the evacuation of all those who must be saved."

An official communique concerning military operations said the Nationalists had started another offensive on the Toledo front south of Madrid "where they succeeded in capturing some positions."

The communique added, "All was quiet elsewhere."

Navy Asks Two 45,000-Ton Warships, Biggest in World

Defense

here. Made with the sanction of the Administration, the sales brought on a Congressional foreign policy fight, Senate isolationists opposing the United States aiding the democracies to rearm.

A board of four Army officers was ordered to leave Washington Thursday for Puerto Rico to make a survey of sites for an air base there. Officers on the board, who will fly to the island are Col. Hugo E. Pitz, Lieut. Col. Joseph T. McNarney, Maj. Karl S. Axtater and Maj. George C. Kenney.

The special Navy Air Base Board headed by Rear Admiral A. J. Hepburn will report to the House Naval Affairs Committee today on the feasibility of establishing a second naval air station between Boston and Canada.

Testifying before the committee on a Navy proposal to build an $18,500,000 Southeastern air base at Jacksonville, Fla., Admiral Hepburn declared that it would cost $4,000,000 more to build the base at Miami. Advocates of the rival sites blocked inclusion of the project in the omnibus naval air base measure now before the Senate Naval Affairs Committee. Chairman Vinson, of the House body, said at the hearings that he understood the Senate group would provide for a new major air base at Quonsett Point, R. I., in reporting the measure.

Senator Lewis (Democrat), of Illinois, urged on the floor that the United States keep a "hands-off" attitude in the dispute between France and Italy over African possessions. He declared internal trouble between citizens of foreign birth would result from taking sides, such as in the "Stop Hitler" parade in New York City Saturday.

Additional Provisions

The additional $19,574,500 proposed for the Navy yesterday includes $14,298,000 for construction and procurement of aircraft, $4,348,000 for ordnance, $300,000 for tools and machinery at the training station at Norfolk, Va.; $225,000 for improvements at the New London (Conn.) submarine base, $354,000 for the Naval Reserve, and $45,000 for repairs at the Naval Academy.

In addition, the President proposed that $16,189,800 of the budget estimates for naval ship construction be spent for new equipment and facilities at Navy yards and stations, including additional land for expansion of the New York Navy Yard.

The War Department appropriation bill, as approved by both Houses, supplies funds for 784 new war planes, 219 of which will complete the old authorized strength of 2,320 plans and 565 to provide an immediate start on the new 6,000 strength voted by Congress last week.

Sees No Danger to U. S.

Senate amendments which must be adjusted in conference include $1,000,000 for aircraft research, $6,000,000 for new arsenal machinery, nearly $2,000,000 for construction at National Guard camps, $332,480 for modernizing 75-mm. guns, and $2,156,466 under a program to enlarge the Reserves by expanding the R. O. T. C.

Reflecting the change of sentiment in this country as the result of European developments during the past year, the usual fight over compulsory military training in land-grant colleges did not materialize. Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, in charge of the bill on the floor, told the Senate that "nearly every college and university in the country wrote to the committee in support of the R. O. T. C. increase."

In a brief debate over foreign policy, Senator King said he could "see no danger whatever threatening the United States."

Senators Minton (Democrat), of Indiana, and McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, challenged King's statements, the former taking issue with a contention that the United States would not be endangered "even if Hitler defeated England."

When Minton suggested that in such an event Germany might obtain Bermuda or part of Canada, Senator Lundeen (Farmer-Labor), of Minnesota, proposed that the United States "settle that" by seizing the British West Indies possessions as payment on war debts. Minton and King objected to the idea as following the "technique of Hitler."

Senator Lodge (Republican), of Massachusetts, stating that the Republican members of the committee had supported the bill asserted that even under its provisions the United States Army would still be fifteenth among the world's forces.

The Income Tax Again

Washington's tax problem has been completely metamorphosed by yesterday's decisions of the Supreme Court eliminating the immunity of Federal employes from State levies upon income. Every time income-tax legislation for the District has been advanced heretofore it has been challenged on grounds of constitutionality. Now that obstacle to a tax measure distributing the burden of local government on the principle of ability to pay has been completely removed.

Some authorities had taken the position that Congress acts as a State legislature when it enacts laws for the District. According to this view, an income tax applying to Government employes here would have been unconstitutional under the previous decisions of the court. Now it is apparent that Congress can enact an income tax for the District whether or not it is deemed to be functioning as a local legislature.

Moreover, the court's decision may have a far-reaching effect upon the attitude of the House toward this type of tax. Last year an income-tax bill was rejected largely because it was said to discriminate between Federal employes in the District and those in the States. Since Government employes outside of Washington may now be taxed by the States, an income tax for the District may be reasonably regarded as a means of preventing discrimination.

Even before the constitutional arguments against a local sales tax were eliminated, there were indications that the House sub-committee on fiscal affairs might abandon the income-sales-tax program of the Citizens Advisory Committee. Now re-examination of the problem seems to be inevitable. Fortunately this situation has developed while the committee is still conducting hearings on the tax bill and can readily take additional testimony if that seems desirable.

It is not to be supposed that either the community or Congress will lightly pass over what appears to be a good opportunity of avoiding the sales tax.

Exegetical Tempest

The editorial in The Post of March 3, commenting on the election to the Papacy of Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli bore the heading, "Upon This Rock," borrowed from the celebrated text of St. Matthew, xvi:18. In employing this figure to describe the courageous reaffirmation of the independence of the Catholic Church, there was of course neither intention nor thought of entering the centuries-old controversy concerning the primacy of St. Peter, which is properly the field of theologians and church historians.

However, The Post received and published a polite but forceful letter from a Protestant clergyman objecting to the allusion and citing various etymological and exegetical arguments against the use of the term "Rock" as applied to the Holy See. When this letter was published, Catholic readers immediately responded and for days a scholarly battle surged across the editorial desk. Greek dictionaries were brought into play; equivalents in the Aramaic for "petra" and "petros" were cited; patristic authorities were quoted. Almost all possible points of view were expounded. Some challenged merely the papal primacy, others the whole theory of apostolic succession.

Each letter published seemed to evoke a half dozen others, many of them running into several pages of manuscript. It was impossible to publish all the letters received, and many of those published were subjected to severe editorial abridgement. An effort was made to maintain, as nearly as possible, an even representation of views on both sides. Now, with the final group of letters appearing today, we feel obliged to declare the controversy concluded so far as this page is concerned.

Nevertheless, we believe that for many of our readers, as for ourselves, the debate has been both interesting and instructive. It stands out in welcome contrast to current political and sociological disputations. Not only that, it has been demonstrated that a point of religious doctrine can be of tremendous interest even in a supposedly irreligious age. And the innumerable citations of texts, evincing close familiarity with the Scriptures, certainly serve to bear out a recent finding by the Institute of Public Opinion that the Bible is still the most widely read of books.

But most impressive of all was our correspondents' exhibition of controversial good manners. There is in American journalism a tendency to believe that the airing of a religious dispute can serve no other purpose than to awaken prejudices and passions. But in this essentially theological controversy there was little or none of the proverbial odium theologicum.

Thus an argument over a matter of Christian faith served to point a heartening and much needed lesson in Christian charity.

Narrowing Immunity

The Supreme Court yesterday substantially narrowed the field of tax immunity. The States are now free to tax the incomes of Federal employes just as other citizens within their jurisdiction are taxed. And the Federal Government may apply non-discriminatory taxes to the salaries of State and local employes.

In the number of persons affected the decision is truly sweeping. It has been carefully estimated that as many as 6,500,000 persons were until yesterday exempt from income taxes by reason of their employment by the Federal, State or local governments. The amount of revenue now to be obtained from these employes may not be large, however, because a great majority of them are earning less than the personal exemptions allowed.

The decision is more important from the viewpoint of constitutional philosophy than from that of revenue. It emphasizes the obligation of all citizens to contribute to the support of their Government in proportion to their income. That obligation now carries more weight than the fine-spun assumption that a tax imposed upon a governmental employe is itself a burden upon government.

Casual reading of yesterday's opinions may easily lead to misunderstanding of what was actually decided. The court did not overrule Marshall's famous decision, in McCulloch vs. Maryland, in which he noted that "the power to tax is the power to destroy." Its action was to sweep away some of the unwarranted assumptions that have grown up around Marshall's opinion. In that case Maryland attempted to prevent the operation of a Federal bank by levying taxes upon it. If, in the present case, New York had levied taxes upon the HOLC the decision would certainly have been different. Justice Stone assumed, in delivering the majority opinion in the O'Keefe case, that the HOLC "is clothed with the same immunity from State taxation as the Government itself."

But the issue before the court was not mutual taxation of Federal and State governmental agencies. The New York tax in question applied only to the salaries of individuals. The mere fact that some of those individuals are employed by agencies of the Government, the court held, does not give them the immunity which the Government itself enjoys. "In no case," said Justice Stone, "is there basis for the assumption that any such tangible or certain economic burden is imposed on the Government concerned as would justify a court's declaring that the taxpayer is clothed with the implied constitutional tax immunity of the Government by which he is employed."

Marshall's decision on the subject was intended to prevent interference by the States with legitimate functions of the Federal Government, and vice versa. It is now agreed that the court in the past went too far in extending this doctrine of tax immunity from governmental agencies to employes. So yesterday a number of decisions not essential to preserve our dual system of government from undesirable encroachment were overruled. But the original doctrine, that one government in a Federal system may not use its taxing power to interfere with the legal functions of another, remains as firmly entrenched as ever.

Lawyers will scan the decision for possible evidence as to what the court's attitude may be toward other questions of tax immunity. Does yesterday's action clear the way for legislation permitting taxation of the income from all future Federal, State and local government bonds? Taxes on securities issued by a government have a much more direct effect upon the performance of its functions than taxes upon its employes. Yet the court is obviously disposed to reexamine issues that were once thought to be closed. The current opinion will, at any rate, stimulate efforts to bring this more controversial issue to a test.

Armament And The Arts

Mussolini's announcement that Italy will continue to arm, "even if it should mean wiping out all that is called civil life," coincides ironically with the announcement of this year's awards by the Guggenheimr Memorial Foundation.

A Guggenheim fellowship is, among other things, a recognition of "scholarly and artistic power" in the recipient. Civil life means, among other things, that condition of society in which the exercise of scholarly and artistic powers is able to have a certain usefulness. Intellectual capacity certainly has no usefulness in societies composed of vast armies, vast prisons and platforms dedicated to shrill caterwauling by gangsters in uniform.

To the extent that civil life disappears, and it is disappearing very fast in Italy and elsewhere, the scholar and the artist disappear with it. Let us hope, however, that the debacle will not come before the 69 current Guggenheim Fellows have completed the 69 separate special researches for which the foundation has provided them with funds.

Let us hope, for instance, that "present day conceptions of free thought," such as they are, do not become anachronisms even as Mr. John Dos Passos investigates them. Let us hope that the illogic of the modern world will not become wholly systematic before Dr. Everett John Nelson systematizes his "intensional" logic. Let us hope, even, that the fate of the Caesars will not overwhelm Mussolini before Dr. Michael Ginsburg has finished his study of "the social policy of the Roman Emperors in their efforts to improve the conditions of the economically weaker groups of Roman society."

The Junior Partner

During the past 12 months the Berlin-Rome axis has won a long succession of sweeping victories. But they have been almost entirely to Germany's benefit. Italy has of late gained precious little from the partnership and Mussolini has had to be content with a waning personal glory and vague intimations of possible future rewards.

On Saturday, Hitler remembered his junior partner long enough to send a fervent telegram assuring the Duce that "the German people stand shoulder to shoulder" with Italy "in defense against all hateful and incomprehensible attempts to restrict the justified will for living of our two peoples." At first glance it looked like a blank check for Mussolini to fill out at the expense of France and Great Britain.

But Mussolini, who knows much more about the rapidly developing weaknesses of Italy than Hitler does, is not disposed to jump off a precipice blindfolded. He knows that the spirit of conciliation which inspired Munich is definitely on the wane both in London and Paris. He knows, also, that Great Britain and France are infinitely more powerful in the Mediterranean than they are in Central and Eastern Europe. He knows, also, that whatever the outcome of war now, it would at least lay Italy in ruins.

Undoubtedly that is why, in his speech last Sunday, Mussolini refrained from making a frontal attack on the democracies. Il Duce posed and strutted. His remarks were full of boasting and bluster. But the belligerence of his tone was in sharp contrast with the actual modesty of his demands.

Last December, the Italian Chamber of Deputies raised a carefully inspired clamor for Italian acquisition of Tunisia, Corsica, Nice and Savoy. The following day the Fascist press added Djibouti and a share in control of the Suez Canal to the list. Mussolini's speech on Sunday modified these demands sharply. He merely declared that there are problems of a colonial character which must be solved. "These problems," he said, "have a name. They are called Tunisia, Djibouti, and the Suez Canal." But he did not demand any specific solution.

The speech, therefore, was obviously a bid for French concessions. Mussolini is realist enough to see that what France will not surrender at the point of the bayonet she may cede in an effort to further the policy of appeasement. In the game which the European powers are playing for such tremendous stakes the democracies have steadily discarded from strength, while the totalitarian powers have skillfully utilized bluff to make good the deficiencies of their hands. And there was lots of the old bluff in Mussolini's speech on Sunday.

The democracies, however, are well aware that they have nothing to gain by yielding to Mussolini, particularly after the risks of such a policy have been so clearly demonstrated in the case of Germany. The concessions for which Il Duce asks are not altogether unreasonable. But they must not be made under duress. The only way to stop the spread of aggression is to stand up to it. There were plenty of indications in Mussolini's speech that this is what he expects, and perhaps really hopes, will happen.

The Purple Gang

From the Detroit News.

From as far away as Iowa we have had responses to a plea for more data on how and when Detroit's Purple Gang got its name. A Broadway columnist started it with a version so patently wide of the mark that others, with a passion for truth, are moved to set history straight on the point.

From Boone, a reader sends a version appearing lately in the Des Moines press on the authority of a local writer, once a playmate at the Bishop School here of the lads who formed the nucleus of the later Purples. The tale is that the boys rented a cottage on the Canadian side of Lake St. Clair and there disported themselves in purple bathing trunks. When a tough element took over, it assumed also the innocuous name by which the boys had previously gone.

This version has the merit of some likelihood, as does another, coming from a local source, which traces the name to the color of cabs driven by some of the boys who went over in time from that respectable calling to the faster action of the rackets. In the rivalry of this fleet with others, it was commonly identified as the Purples, or so this explanation has it.

It is unfortunate—for purposes of history at least—that generally speaking the Purples are no more.

"Upon This Rock"

Controversy Concluded

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The attempt to bring the Fathers of the Church into the argument to prove the case against St. Peter's being the Rock, fades into insignificance when it is recalled that for every doubtful text seeming to claim some other interpretations of St. Matthew xvi:18, ten texts of the Fathers can be produced, most clear texts, maintaining that St. Peter actually was the Rock in question—texts from Tertullian, Origen, St. Cyprian, St. Hilary, St. Basil, St. Ambrose, St. Jerome, St. John Chrysostom. A few of these texts follow:

Origen: "Peter was, by the Lord, called a rock, since to him is said, 'Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church.'" (T iii Comm. in Matth. n. 139.)

St. Cyprian: "Peter on whom the church had been built by the Lord himself——" (Ep. lv. ad Cornel.)

St. Hilary "——he took up Peter—to whom he had just before given the keys of the kingdom of heaven, upon whom he was about to build the church, against which the gates of hell should not in any way prevail——" (Tract. in Ps. cxxxi, n. 4.)

St. Basil: "——him who on account of the preeminence of his faith received upon himself the building of the church." (T. i. P i, 1. ii, Adv. Eunom. n. 4.)

St. Ambrose: "It is the same Peter to whom he said, 'thou art Peter and upon this rock I will build my church. Therefore, where Peter is, there is the church——" (T, 1, In Ps. xl, n, 30.)

St. John Chrysostom: "——this very Peter—and when I name Peter, I name that unbroken rock, that firm foundation, the great apostle——" (T. ii Hom. iii de Poenit. n. 4.)

These names listed above and these texts represent only a few of the names and texts which might be quoted.

Remember too that the Fathers could and did use figurative language. We might today speak of the faith of St. Peter as the foundation of the Church, meaning that it was as a reward of his faith that he was made the Rock.

St. Augustine himself in many places readily grants the Primacy of the Pope, which is the real point at issue. E. g.

"If the order of bishops succeeding each other is to be considered, how much more securely, and really beneficially, do we reckon from Peter himself, to whom bearing a figure of the church, the Lord says: 'Upon this rock I will build my church.'" (T. ii, Ep. liii.)

"Who can be ignorant that the most blessed Peter is the first of the Apostles?" (T. iii, Trac. lvi, in Joan. Ev. n. 1.)

In the text quoted by a recent correspondent, St. Augustine merely shows his lack of acquaintance with the Aramaic language when he draws a distinction between the Greek words "petra" and "petros"—both of which are represented by one and the same word in Aramaic, the language in which Christ spoke and in which St. Matthew's Gospel was originally written. And I am not guilty of irreverence in so writing. St. Augustine is usually ranked with St. Thomas among the church's greatest theologians. It still remained possible for him to make a mistake in the matter of language. Some of his expressions in support of the Papacy and of the primacy of the Pope glow and burn with power. Space forbids further quotation here.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

It is hard for me to understand how after reading the New Testament in either English, Greek or Latin one can presume to base an assumption on a single sentence in Matthew xvi:18 that the church was bullded on Peter as a metaphorical rock. A reading of verses 13 to 18 plainly shows that the rock on which the church was to be built was the confession of faith that Christ was "the son of the living God."

Peter was poor material for the foundation of a church, one of the most flighty and inconstant of the apostles. Despite the tradition connecting Peter with Rome there is no historical evidence that he was ever in Rome. E. V. WILCOX.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

My compliments to you, not so much for your editorial entitled "Upon This Rock," but for what it has accomplished. As I see it, this controversy, which, unfortunately, appears to have developed into a quibble over translation and interpretation, has accomplished one thing, i. e., it has undoubtedly caused many persons like myself to dust off their Bibles to see what this was all about.

If it is still not clear that the word "rock" did not refer to Peter or any other person, except perhaps indirectly to Christ himself, and the words "And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter and" were merely coincidental or incidental since Peter (rock), so named by Jesus, was the one who had answered "Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God." Ask yourself what prompted the remark "upon this rock I will build my church."

For those who may still believe that Christianity was founded on a man, Eph. ii:20 is quoted: "And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Reason that—any builder can.

May your good work continue.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Let me commend the Rev. Mr. Koch as being by far the most scholarly of the debaters on the non-Catholic side, in this "Rock" controversy.

Strictly private interpretation of the Bible by one infinitesimal, fallible mind carries no weight with a Catholic whose beliefs are based on the wisdom of history's greatest saints and sages. As a Catholic, I respect Mr. Koch's sincere and disinterested commentary, at least based on a more educated level than his own feelings. However, let Mr. Koch remember that that rock of which so much has been said is, for Catholics, just as he has quoted it out of the early doctors. There is no contradiction therein, only supplementary elaboration of all that which is contained in the divine office of Peter, the holder of the keys to Heaven, the vicar of Christ on earth, who is the First and Eternal Rock, then and now.

That rock has not sunk in a sea of controversy and doubt—as have all those other myriads of earth particles which detatched themselves from that foundation—but has lived gloriously and miraculously on, gaining more and more strength and dignity out of the weakness of those who, bewildered and leaderless, beat against the Gates of Rome.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Whether or not Peter was the first Pope will forever remain a subject of controversy. Suffice it to say that dogma and creed have failed utterly to establish peace in a war torn world.

As a matter of fact, Christ gave but two commandments: "Love God and thy neighbor as thyself."

A NEIGHBOR.
Washington, March 18.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Mr. James A. Caulfield has kindly requested me, for the sake of accuracy, to give authority for the claim I made that the name "Peter" is derived from a Greek word meaning a "pebble, or little rolling stone."

In the first place I wish to state that as a Greek student I agree with every one of the Greek authorities he quoted as to the meaning they gave to the Greek words "petra" and "petros." But I cannot agree with the conclusions Mr. Caulfield deduced. All Greek authorities are agreed that "petra" means "a rock," "a ledge," "a boulder," "a cliff," or "an immovable rock," and that "petros" means "a piece of a rock," "a fragment of a rock," large or small, "a stone"—a "movable stone," or "fragment." Upon these definitions there is no disagreement among Greek dictionaries and scholars.

The name Peter is derived from the Greek "petros" and not from "petra." "Petros" is never used in the New Testament Greek, except as it applies to Peter as a proper name. Christ said to Simon, "Thou shalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, Peter," Greek "petros," not "petra." John 1:42. The authorized version of King James says: "Cephas, which is by interpretation, a stone." The Aramaic "Cephas," the Greek "Petros," the English "Peter," meaning "a stone."

The word "rock" in the New Testament text comes in every instance from the Greek word "petra" and not from "petros."

In I Cor. 10:4, where Paul refers to "that Spiritual Rock," he clearly says "and that Rock was Christ." The Greek word he uses is "Petra" for "Rock," and not "Petros." It is easy to see that "petra" refers to Christ and not to Peter, who was "Petros." When Paul called Christ "Petra" and not "Petros," it is conclusive proof that "Petra" refers to Christ in Matt. 16:18, and "Petros" to Peter. The Bible invariably uses "Petra" as a "Rock," and "Petros" as "a stone." This is the highest authority we can possibly quote.

Mr. Roosevelt's Popularity

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Seasoned observers throughout the country have attempted to interpret the national election of last November as a definite swing to the right as regards the political philosophy of public opinion. I am inclined to take issue with those who expound such a contention and rather believe that the election of some 80 odd Republicans to the national Legislature was a mere reaction, and healthy one at that, in our processes of democratic rule.

I take as evidence the recently conducted Gallup poll which appeared in The Washington Post. It clearly shows that Mr. Roosevelt's popularity is at the very high mark of 58.2 per cent. It clarifies this fact by showing that "despite the squabbles of domestic politics and the continued split between conservative and New Deal Democrats in Congress, the President himself is more popular today than he was at the time of the Congressional election last November, when the institute's index showed him supported by 54.4 per cent of major party voters."

The same poll goes on to say that "the present session of Congress is one of the few during which the President's popularity with the masses has not declined. In the institute's 62 monthly surveys which have measured his standing, there has been a drop in his popularity during every session except that of 1938."

Such statistics can only substantiate my previous contention that the New Deal is still overwhelmingly popular with the common people of this country. Fifty-three per cent of the farmers as well as 54 per cent of the middle-income group are still for Mr. Roosevelt, leaving the only group opposed, the upper income group who, of course, have consistently fought his humanitarian ideals.

Beulah

BEULAH BURRELL was a small, wiry, good-natured colored woman who lived in a little house on the edge of town where the road turned by the creek and went under the railroad trestle. In the long summers when he was growing up and spent visits of two or there months each year at his grandfather's George passed Beulah's house nearly every day. When he was small, these trips used to be made in either his grandfather's buggy or surrey, behind slow old Frank, the last of his grandfather's driving horses. But already Frank's days were numbered and at last an automobile took his place.

After that it took less time to pass Beulah's house, which meant there was less time for George to observe the easy freedom of the life of Beulah and her entire household. Walter, her husband, George never saw, but Beulah and her many children spent most of the summer in the grassless, sun-baked little yard behind a few straggly "butter bean" vines that trailed along a low fence and that Beulah, between her other activities, occasionally hoed.

Looking back, George can remember that there was actually a time when he envied Beulah and her family two splendid advantages they enjoyed. Imagine having a creek in which to spend the long summer days in the shade of willows and sycamores, and imagine being able to watch the trains from your own yard roll practically over your head! But there was something George didn't know: Beulah had an ambition. Beulah wanted to live in a house with a bow window.

It wasn't exactly that Beulah was dissatisfied with her lot in life. Her house, which was of a reddish-brown, weather-beaten color, though not ample, seemed to accommodate its members who never failed to increase by one a year. Her house was larger than that of some of her neighbors. She had limitless light and air, for the door and all the windows stood open all day long. She sang a lot and laughed a lot, rolling her eyes and showing her white teeth. She was happy—but—she wanted to live in a house that had a bow window.

Beulah took in washing. George can see her now, bent over a large cast-iron cauldron in her yard, blue wood smoke rising from the out-of-doors fire. Invariably she had an audience, now and then some colored woman passing along the road and always the youngest of her own offspring. The oldest assisted her, either by bringing the water in buckets from the creek, sloshing it in the dusty road, or by "minding" the youngest.

There was one story George always remembered. It was an incident that occurred annually. One of Beulah's "white folks" stopped her car at Beulah's gate, and, finding the yard deserted, touched her horn. Beulah's oldest girl came out of the house.

"Is your mother here, Edna-Evons?"

"Yas'm."

"I've brought my laundry."

The expression on the girl's face didn't change.

"She say, please ma'am, do you min' takin' 'em somewhere else this time?"

And "this time" it was, for the next time Beulah continued as though nothing had happened.

Beulah's oldest was a brown-skinned boy named Bill. Being the son of Walter, Bill's full name was William Theodore Roosevelt Junior. It was the "Junior" that always amused George. To the small Virginia town, Bill soon became a personage because he could dance. On Saturdays and Sundays, particularly when great train loads of excursionists came in from the north to visit the caverns, Bill never left the station. For pennies and for the entertainment of the enthusiastic visitors Bill, in scrubbed blue overalls, jigged with a shining face on the brick pavement of the station platform. Not alone for his dancing was Bill applauded, for, though he did not know it, he was giving the guests what they wanted—the atmosphere of the old South.

The time came, before George realized it was possible, when Bill took unto himself an helpmeet. For a little while, as George recalls, Bill was absent from the maternal roof. Then Bill came home, and—Beaulah's family was increased by two. In a little while it was impossible to tell Beulah's grandchildren from her own children, and, with a white towel around her head, it was sometimes impossible, driving by the little house, to tell thin, wiry, little Beulah from her own daughters.

Well, Beulah got her wish. She moved the whole tribe from the bursting little house under the trestle to a house right smack on Main street in the heart of colored town out on west-end hill. Driving by one time, George had the house pointed out to him. He caught a flying glimpse of it—it had front steps and . . . a bow window.

Not long ago George passed Beulah's old house, more weather-stained, smaller looking than he had remembered it. The first breath of spring was rolling over Virginia and already Beulah's windows and door stood open. The yard was filled with two generations.

"She's back," George's cousin said. "She got her bow window all right, but it wasn't enough. The children couldn't stay away from the creek and the trains. Beulah had no time to sit in the window and the yard was too small. The cars that passed all carried strangers. Having learned that things aren't always what they seem, Beulah came back. And I believe she's looking forward to an annual event . . ."

Garner's Silence

OLD MAN Garner, that old man Garner, he don't say nothin' but he keeps on growing in the political consciousness of the National Capital and of the Nation-at-large as a candidate for the Democratic nomination in 1940, possibly with Jim Farley in the two-spot.

Now if you ask me the mail address of the political consciousness of the National Capital and of the country-at-large I have to say that it is just something that I made up. But let me ask you if you haven't heard—and perhaps thought—a great deal about Mr. Garner these last few months, and if he hasn't been impressed on your political consciousness as a conservative Democrat, distinctly on the rugged and picturesque side, an opponent of extravagance, emotionalism and flippancy, and a symbol of government by professionals as distinguished from book-taught amateurs of the ivy league.

True, Mr. Farley himself has said that any politician of the Democratic party who openly seeks the nomination before President Roosevelt has had his say must be out of his mind. But that is just it. Mr. Garner has not openly invited the nomination. That is being done for him, unintentionally, perhaps, through suggestion in the newspaper coverage out of Washington. If people reading about him think he is their man, he is. Mr. Garner is a cactus Cal Coolidge, whose very silence against portions of the New Deal becomes more thunderous each day while other men in open opposition to the Administration waste their effect in small bleats.

Old Man Garner Silent Kibitzer

OLD MAN Garner's silence is interpreted as both protest and loyalty to the President and contributes to his growth on both counts. But, of course, while the President is making decisions—and, if you think so, mistakes—for home consumption and for the export trade as well, old man Garner, the silent kibitzer, don't say nothin'. As Lord Byron, the National League umpire, used to sing, "You can't get a hit with your bat on your shoulder," but you can't strike out sitting on the bench, either. And Mr. Garner has not been out of the dugout in so long that he will blink like an owl at high noon when he finally does emerge from the trench.

But if he don't say nothin' how is it known that old man Garner is displeased?

Well, this is Washington, a great sewing circle in which bad news travels fast, and Mr. Garner isn't always reserved in off-the-record conversations. That stuff gets around from man to man and into print as background information and people who think Mr. Garner would make a good President for a change talk it up and pretty soon there is your candidacy.

And what has he got besides those eyebrows and a still tongue in his head?

Well, he is a country banker with long experience both in business and in politics. He rocks along with people. He goes to bed after supper and gets up at some awful hour of the morning. He knows plenty about legislation and government. What else are you wanting, because this just about spells him out and he has come along to the position that he now occupies in the field mainly on orthodoxy, simplicity, silence and, of course, party regularity. After all, it doesn't take much, you know. Worse men have made it.

Will Appeal To Little Businessman

AND WHY then is he being talked up as a Presidential candidate? Maybe you had better ask yourself that, because it is the likes of you who are talking him up. There is no mechanical boom, but everything about old man Garner points an appeal to the businessman, especially the little one, and the home-owning and life insurance types.

Radical labor wouldn't like him, but the A. F. of L. kind might think that a banker and businessman of long service in government would give business a chance to make a dollar and hire some men. He would try, anyway, and he would certainly have no truck with men who say that the capitalistic system is doomed and might better be destroyed and replaced now than later. And in foreign relations he probably would aim to keep his emotions under his scalp and not worry too much about the democracy of Britain and France so long as ours was let alone.

Maybe you wouldn't care for him. That's all right. I am not trying to sell you a bill. I am just trying to count Mr. Garner up and see why he is coming along without having said aye, yes or no.

Repercussions Of The European Crisis

Special Correspondence of The Post

Montreal

THE EVENTS of last September had far-reaching effects on Canadian opinion.

After 1918 three main attitudes toward foreign policy developed. There were the collectivists, who believed that Canada should assume the obligations of League membership and that the continuing unity of the British Commonwealth itself could best be insured through its members meeting at Geneva first and at London second.

There were the imperialists to whom loyalty to Great Britain and the British Empire came first, who therefore disagreed with Canada's governor-general, Lord Tweedsmuir, when he said in 1937, "A Canadian's first loyalty is not to the British Commonwealth of Nations, but to Canada and to Canada's King . . ." They assumed that a foreign policy that was good for Great Britain would also be good for Canada.

Finally, there were the isolationists who believed that self-interest demanded that Canada should avoid all commitments in Europe, whether of an imperialist or League nature, which, in their eyes, were not properly the concern of a North American country. These included, but for their own special reasons, a vast majority of French Canadians who, however, valued the tie with Great Britain and the protection afforded their minority rights through the British North America act as a barrier against the advancing tie of an alien North American materialism.

VERY ROUGHLY that was the situation before Munich. During the last critical days before Munich, every Canadian realized, however reluctantly, that if Great Britain went to war Canada would inevitably, as in 1914, be involved.

One immediate result of Munich was to induce in many a profound distrust of British leadership, a tendency to question or at least re-examine the value of the British connection, and to fill them with an emotionally strong, if rather vague, sentiment of isolationism very similar to that held in many parts of the United States. As the weeks went by and the full consequences of Munich became increasingly apparent, these feelings hardened in some into an opinion which favored an actual policy of isolation, while in others a growing conviction regarding the menace of the dictatorships has persuaded them, often reluctantly, that support of Great Britain in a European war, if it comes, will once more be necessary if cherished institutions and ways of life are to be preserved.

The imperialists, for the most part, remained convinced, both on grounds of moral obligation as well as sound policy, that Canada should immediately give assistance to Great Britain without limit. But even in imperialist quarters there was evidence of misgiving as to the consequences of Munich for Great Britain's position and amongst a few outspoken criticism of the policy of concessions pursued by Mr. Chamberlain.

To the English-speaking Canadian isolationist, Munich came as final confirmation of their long-held belief that the League had only been used for the old sordid game of power politics. Along with all this has gone increased discussion whether Pan-Americanism offers a practicable regional alternative to the League, although it can hardly be said that an important body of opinion has yet convinced itself that membership in the Pan-American Union represents a worth-while policy for Canada to adopt.

But the current conflict regarding foreign policy is, in reality, only the latest aspect of the problem of British Commonwealth relationships. Autonomy has been achieved by the dominions in domestic affairs. Effective autonomy, however, has not yet been achieved in relation to the vital question of foreign policy.

THE CONFLICT centers around the political and constitutional issues involved in peace and war. The question of Canada's "right to neutrality" is beginning to be widely debated throughout the country. Is it a fact that a state of automatic belligerency exists for Canada when Great Britain goes to war? What does Premier MacKenzie King mean when he says "Parliament will decide?" Does and can this mean anything more than that Parliament will determine the extent and nature of Canadian participation in a war to which British action, or the action of a foreign government against Britain, will have already committed Canada? Is it in the interests of sound, responsible government that the Canadian government should have no obligation to decide this issue itself for its own people?

This discussion really raises two separate issues which are in constant danger of being confused. There is the purely constitutional and legal question, on which opinions differ, whether, since the Statute of Westminster of 1931, a state of automatic belligerency exists for Canada when Great Britain is at war. The fact that opinions do differ and that in any case foreign countries, confused by the subtleties of British Commonwealth relationships, might well feel uncertain as to Canada's position, makes it appear to many highly important that the dominion Parliament should pass the necessary clarifying legislation to the effect that "Canada shall not assume the status of belligerent otherwise than by a declaration of war made by His Majesty with specific reference to Canada and only on the advice of His Majesty's government in Canada."

THE WORDS just quoted are the actual text of a bill introduced into the Canadian House of Commons on February 2 by J. T. Thorson, a Liberal member from Manitoba. Entirely separate, although often confused, is the political question whether, granting that Canada has acquired or could acquire by suitable legislation this "right to neutrality," it is desirable that she should in fact pursue a policy of neutrality in a war in which Great Britain and perhaps the other dominions are engaged.

The fact is that the movement to have Canada's right to neutrality clarified by suitable legislation is beginning to attract an increasing degree of support, including support from many who would certainly oppose any policy of neutrality. Such people believe that until the Canadian government has the sole responsibility in the face of the world for making the vital decisions involved in peace and war, the autonomy supposedly brought into being by the Statute of Westminster will remain a myth; that responsible government will not fully exist in Canada; and that any real basis for achieving an enduring Canadian unity or lasting commonwealth co-operation will not come into being.

DISCUSSION of this issue reflects the conflict, actually of long standing, between groups who differ as to the basis on which such things as Canadian unity and commonwealth co-operation can be achieved. Despite the repeated lessons of 150 years of history, the imperialists continue to fear any change in an existing legal bond, believing it to presage a severing of the real commonwealth relationship, whilst many Canadians who anxiously desire Canadian unity and still believe in the immense possibilities for good of commonwealth co-operation, are convinced that this further step at the present time is an essential condition of achieving these aims. Hitherto the isolationist local-mindedness of the French Canadian in contrast with either the pro-imperial Britishness or the pro-League internationalism of so many English-speaking Canadians has been an important factor in Canada's lack of national unity. Now, since Munich, a far larger number of English-speaking Canadians can see a greater possibility of discovering common ground with their French Canadian brothers.

MUNICH has left Canada confused and perplexed. For some old loyalties have been broken or strained; for others, re-affirmed. New and unexpected harmonies have appeared. Under the stress of developing events, Canadians cannot evade the necessity of determining more closely the nature of their future relations to Great Britain and the rest of the commonwealth, to which they are tied by much past history and sentiment, as well as by existing constitutional links, nor can they evade the necessity of determining the nature of their relation to the other occupant of the North American continent, from whom geography in any case prevents them from escaping and to whom they are naturally attracted by an increasing community in ways of life and thought.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Shadow-Boxing Over the Budget

ALTHOUGH there has been no end of talk about the unbalanced budget, three months have passed since Congress convened and as yet nothing has been done to clarify the problem, much less to solve it. Among the Republicans and the non-New Deal Democrats a certain number of legislators have succeeded in establishing a reputation as men who deplore extravagance and have sound and orthodox intentions. But, beyond a little cheeseparing on relief, they have produced neither a principle nor a policy nor a program. And on the other side, in Administration quarters, all the talk by Mr. Hopkins and Mr. Morgenthau has been quickly brought to nothing by the President and his intimate advisers.

Treasury Loyal To The New Deal

THIS SHADOW-BOXING in Washington is the result of a three-cornered dispute. In one corner there are what may be described as sincere and naive advocates of balancing the budget by reducing expenditures; they think that if only Congress would show some tangible desire to spend less money, there would be such a revival of confidence that the resulting boom would liquidate the deficit. They know that the budget cannot be balanced immediately. But they believe that by making gestures in the right direction, they will change the psychology of businessmen and investors so much that the budget will be balanced eventually.

In the second corner, there is the Treasury, which also wishes sincerely to balance the budget. But it knows, and has deliberately let it be known that it knows, that public spending will not be replaced by private investment merely by making gestures about economy. The Treasury knows that private investment is throttled by taxes that make risks unprofitable, by wages and regulatory policies that make the prospect of profit too small to induce investment. But the Treasury is too loyal to the New Deal, and too cautious, to say bluntly what it has been trying to convey by hints.

Advisers Prefer To Retain Taxes

FINALLY, there is the President's own faction, which understands very well what would have to be done to balance the budget, but does not want to do it. This faction is in control of the Administration. It realizes that if public spending, which it directs, is replaced by private investment, which it will not be able to direct, the change will mark the end of what it holds to be the essential system of the New Deal. For as long as the well-being of the mass of the people is dependent upon governmental action through public spending the mass of the people cannot, as Mr. Eccles has just told Congress, become independent of government without an economic "disaster."

Mr. Eccles is entirely right. If you stopped public spending without reviving private investment, the result would be disastrous. What he has not said is that the President's most intimate advisers—to which he does not belong—are determined to maintain the taxes and the wage policies and the restrictions, which, by throttling private investment, make the continuation of public spending inevitable.

Tax Rate Slash Held Necessary

THE UNDERLYING issue in the budget controversy is not whether Congress shall retrench a little now but whether it shall remove the deterrents to private investment. Those who want to balance the budget by cheeseparing will surely fail. If they cut expenditures severely without first removing the great deterrents to private investment, they will almost surely cause the disaster that Mr. Eccles is talking about. For we are operating under a system which throttles private enterprise so effectively that it can be kept going only by vast deficit priming by the Government. The priming cannot safely be discontinued unless the throttle is released.

This means that the reform of the system will have to begin with measures that may seem not to balance the budget but to unbalance it still further. There should be a reduction of the tax rates. The reduction should be made for the purpose of increasing the prospect of private profit.

Present Budget Can't Be Balanced

THE FACT that a reduction of tax rates will seem to yield less revenue out of the present national income should not be regarded as an objection to this reform. For lower rates, by making private investment profitable, will eventually yield a larger revenue out of a larger national income; by reviving private investment, they will make less necessary the current amount of public spending.

The present budget, as the President himself has recognized, cannot be balanced by increasing taxes. It cannot be balanced by reducing expenditures. I can be balanced only by increasing the national income. But the national income can be increased only by a revival of private investment, and private investment can be revived only by enhancing private profit, and private profit can be enhanced only by taking less of the profit in taxes.

Thus the way to reduce the deficit is to reduce taxes. The existing tax system does not balance the budget. By throttling private enterprise it perpetuates the deficits.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

A Day With Rand McNally

Scene: Office at the Rand McNally Map Works.

Sales Manager (dejectedly)—We're rushed.

President—That's too bad. We've got to do something to stop it. The whole shop is going nuts. We put three more cartographers in the asylum yesterday. Nine color pressmen have had mental breakdowns in the last six weeks. How do you feel?

Sales Manager—I feel dizzy.

President—Of course you feel dizzy. So do I. We've got to find a way out. We get a map all drawn, printed and distributed and—bang!—it's no good!

Sales Manager—We don't even finish drawing it before it's no good.

President—It's no sooner distributed than it comes back with letters saying, "You know very well we ordered a map of modern Europe. What is the meaning of this?"

Sales Manager—If the map business was only like the baking business.

President—Why?

Sales Manager—We could just deliver 'em hot and not be responsible if they turned cold.

President—Hitler works so fast we couldn't even keep 'em hot while delivering 'em.

Sales Manager—Couldn't we just make a map and leave out middle Europe. Put in New England, instead, or something . . .?

President. What would people think of finding New England in middle Europe?

Sales Manager—They'd like it. It would be stationary!

President—I was thinking of leaving out middle Europe and just putting in some Peter Arno cartoons and a quiz.

Sales Manager—Would it make sense?

President—No, but what map of Europe today makes sense?

Cartographer (rushing through office and tearing hair)—Where's Bohemia? . . . Who's got Moravia? . . . Memel, Memel, who's got the button? . . . Anybody seen Ruthenia lately?

President (shaking head)—See? That's what's happening to the whole staff.

Pressman (coming in on all fours)—Hush! I'm looking for Czecho-Slovakia. It was here a little while ago. Say, have you got Prague in your pocket?

President—No.

Pressman—I wouldn't put it past you.

President—It's pathetic. Maybe it was a mistake ever to go into the map business.

President—I remember away back when a map stayed fresh the year around.

Sales Manager—My father had one he kept three summers. It was almost as good as new.

(The phone rings. The president answers, and slams up the receiver indignantly.)

Sales Manager—Who was it?

President—Some idiot wanted a map of Europe for May geography classes in a public school. And I'm afraid to go ahead even with April!

And No Wonder

When anybody is being chased up an alley, pinned against a post and given a complete slugging today, they say he is "getting the old Munich."

This department has been thinking over the recent rebuking of Jim Barton by Equity for using bad language back stage in "Tobacco Road." It still puzzles us. Maybe what Jim needs is a good clean week in old-fashioned burlesque.

Security Act Revision

By Mark Sullivan

Defects Admitted

CONGRESS, of course, will make, and promptly, the changes in the social security act which Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau somewhat sensationally recommended last week. Mr. Morgenthau's retreat is important standing alone. It is even more important when considered in connection with two other current developments. The sum of the three is hope. And since hope these days is a rare commodity, any peep of it is news, and should make the headlines.

These three events, looked upon as a group, compose a sign of the times. Consider the latest of the three.

The social security act was passed in 1935. At the time few paid attention to it. Congress paid little attention—at that time Congress was passing any bills the Administration sent to it, often without examining them. The public paid little attention because the act was not to take effect for nearly two years, until January 1, 1937.

When the act went into operation there was outcry against some features of it. This outcry, the Administration resisted. Critics of the act were cried down. Analyses of the act, showing its extremely serious defects, were ignored or scorned.

But now, some two years after the act went into effect, nearly four years after it was passed, the Administration admits some of the more serious defects and recommends change of them. The changes it recommends are precisely the changes that critics, such as Senator Vandenberg, demanded. The social security act is to be shorn of the features that made it, in its original form, an almost fatal handicap to business and to the working of the American form of society.

CONSIDER now a second act, the undistributed profits tax. It was passed in 1936. It was passed under, and only because of, pressure on Congress by the Administration. It was very novel, a darling of the New Deal. Toward criticism of it, and analysis showing the handicap it would be to business and the American form of society, the Administration turned obstinately deaf ears.

The law went into effect. One year's operation of it justified its critics. Congress last year reduced the rate of it to almost a negligible figure, 2½ per cent. This action by Congress, Mr. Roosevelt resented. He refused to sign the general tax measure in which the reduction of the undivided profits tax was included as a detail. He ostentatiously permitted the measure to become a law without his signature.

But today the undistributed profits tax is almost universally recognized as what it is. The Treasury so recognizes it. If Mr. Roosevelt does not so recognize it, that is largely because his pride is involved. The undistributed profits tax would not be enacted today; it may be repealed; if not repealed, it is certain to be left at a negligible figure.

Consider finally the bill for government reorganization. It was sent to Congress by President Roosevelt on January 12, 1937. Examination of the measure revealed that it gave immense and unprecedented powers to the President. It would, in the words of a critic at the time, "strip Congress of power" and so centralize government that government could only be operated adequately by a dictatorship.

Reorganization Bill Vastly Modified

FOR MORE than two years the bill was resisted by a Congress that had come back to the exercise of its function, and that had been alarmed by another of the President's measures, the one to change the Supreme Court. Throughout the two years, the Government reorganization bill was worn down. The Administration itself, recognizing the disquiet of Congress and of the country, trimmed the measure down. It was further trimmed down by the committees of Congress that had charge of it. When introduced in the last Congress, it was passed by the Senate. But the House, feeling the measure still gave too much power to the President, declined to pass it—one Democrat out of every three voting, voted against it. The bill, still further trimmed down, was reintroduced in the present Congress. Last week it was passed—but passed only after it had been reduced to proportions consistent with the American form of government.

Three modifications of the New Deal do not make a summer of restoration of the American system. Yet these incidents may be looked upon as a deep tide, running far below the surface of day-to-day incidents, and counter to them.

Two of these changes were forced upon the Administration. Only one was made by the Administration voluntarily. This one might be the most significant—if it should turn out to be the beginning of a change of policy.

It is certain that much of the New Deal, almost all of it, must be modified if our form of government and society is to survive and function. The modification will consist of cutting away those portions of New Deal innovations which are inconsistent with the American system, saving the principle and as much of the mechanism as is practicable, and then making the whole workable.

This revision of the New Deal can be done by either of two agencies. It can be done by whatever President and party succeeds the New Deal in power in 1941; or it can be begun by the New Deal itself during the 21 months of power left to it. If the New Deal uses its opportunity promptly and thoroughly, such an attitude would offer to it the best hope it can have of winning next year's Presidential election and continuing in power. The New Deal, by drastically putting its own house in order, might bring business recovery, and deprive the Republicans of their chance of a job.

Mussolini's Bait

By Barnet Nover

Will France Swallow It?

THE BIG NEWS of the week seems to be that in his speech of last Sunday Premier Mussolini didn't declare war on France and didn't ask for the earth with a white fence around it. So everybody is relieved.

It happens, of course, that the totalitarian powers never declare war, though they wage it unceasingly. Japan has never declared war on China despite the fact that there has been uninterrupted fighting in the Far East for more than 20 months. Italy never bothered to declare war on Ethiopia or Republican Spain. Hitler issued no declarations of war prior to sending German troops into Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Memel. It stands to reason that if and when Mussolini gets around to attacking France he won't notify Messrs. Daladier and Bonnet in advance.

Nor are Mussolini or his fellow dictators naive enough to try and achieve in one fell swoop what can be achieved piecemeal with far greater ease and safety.

THE NAIVETTE is entirely on the other side. There were Englishmen and Frenchmen and Americans who accepted at their face value Japan's asurances in 1931 that the occupation of Mukden was only a temporary police measure.

The French and British governments were unquestionably relieved when Hitler and Mussolini accepted the non-intervention agreement concerning Spain for, as they saw it, it meant that the Fascist powers and all others would keep their hands off the conflict raging in the Iberian Peninsula. And every time that Hitler has made a speech—his address to the Reichstag last January is a case in point—in which something like a moderate note was struck, a sigh of relief has gone up.

There is an endless capacity for self-deception and wish-fulfilment in democratic lands.

Moderation Of Duce's Demands Are Deceptive

IN EVALUATING Mussolini's address of Sunday, the tendency is to dismiss the bellicose phrases and concentrate on the symptoms of moderation to be found therein. In particular it is being noted that the Duce now confines his demands on France to three areas, namely, Tunisia, Djibouti and the Suez Canal, and that instead of serving an ultimatum on the Paris government he merely asks that these problems be discussed.

"The French government," he said," is perfectly free to refuse us even the simplest discussion of these problems as it has done up to now . . . But it cannot complain later if the ditch which now separates the two countries becomes so deep that filling it becomes hard work, if not impossible."

THIS SEEMS, on the face of it reasonable. A request for a conference to discuss questions at issue between two countries is not an ultimatum. And all that Mussolini seems to be asking is that France confer with Italy regarding the latter's demands regarding Tunisia, Djibouti and the Suez Canal.

To be sure, he doesn't say what precisely he is after in Tunisia and Djibouti and what he wants regarding the Suez Canal. He may ask for a vast deal more than France is today, in any sense, willing to consider giving up. But the Duce's very vagueness is being interpreted in some quarters both in Paris and London as a sign of moderation.

It is no secret that the French government has long been prepared to make minor concessions to Italy regarding free-port rights in Djibouit and the operation of the railroad from that port to Addis Ababa, capital of Ethiopia; that she has been willing to guarantee existing Italian rights in Tunisia, and that she might not be averse to giving Italy a directorship on the Suez Canal governing board.

With regard to these matters the French position has never been intransigeant and probably is not now.

BUT WHY THEN all this sword clanking on Mussolini's part; why the statement that "we consider a perpetual peace as a catastrophe for human civilization;" why the emphasis on "more cannon, more ships, more airplanes, at whatever cost, with whatever means even if it should mean wiping out all that is called civil life?"

In other words, why does Italy have to demand what France is prepared to give without much asking?

The answer is, first of all, that concessions won without the appearance of a struggle are, in the eyes of the Fascist dictator, not half as valuable as the same concessions seemingly wrested from a reluctant foe. But that is not all there is to it. For Mussolini not only wants concessions, he wants these concessions discussed around the conference table.

Has The Lesson Of Munich Been Learned?

THE STRATEGY is obvious. Once given a French readiness to discuss with Italy what the latter nation is to receive by way of appeasement, is no telling how far France may have to go in giving way. At Godesberg, Mr. Chamberlain found himself forced to go much further in making concessions to the Fuehrer than he had gone at Berchtesgaden. At Munich he went further than he had gone at Godesberg. And afterward Hitler took with impunity what had been denied him at Munich.

Mussolini has become a disciple of his erstwhile pupil. He knows what he is after. He also knows that he cannot, at the moment, successfully wage war on France. Even with Hitler's assistance there is every reason to believe that in such a war he would be smashed in short order. But he is equally aware of the fact that once he can get the French into the mood of making concessions and willing to enter a conference room he may get far more than the French are ready and willing to give at this moment.

IT IS CERTAINLY childish to assume that the Duce would be content for long, if at all, with minor concessions concerning Djibouti, Tunisia and the Suez Canal. Not for such scraps has he spent Italian blood and treasure in Ethiopia and Spain and grimly stood by Hitler while the latter gobbled up Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Memel and made himself master of the rest of central and eastern Europe.

What Mussolini wants, as is apparent between the lines of his latest speech, is to get France in a position where one concession will lead to another until France and Great Britain will be as impotent in preventing Italian expansion in the Mediterranean as they now are in preventing German expansion in eastern Europe.

With tragic tardiness, the European democracies have discovered the real meaning of Munich, but who can say, despite the lesson of that surrender, that they will not repeat the same mistakes in the Mediterranean?

Western Wins 2 Top Honors In Cadet Drill

Roosevelt High's First Battalion Third Among 13 District Units

Western High School cadets captured the first two prizes for the District's 13 battalions yesterday at Central High School Stadium. More than 21,000 students participated.

It was the first time in the history of drill competition that one school took both top honors.

Led by Cadet Maj. Roy Millenson, Western's First Battalion earned the ranking silver cup and silk flag. Millenson was awarded a gold medal. Second place went to Western's Second Battalion, headed by Cadet Maj. Justine Locke. The First Battalion of Roosevelt High, commanded by Cadet Maj. Richard Barse, was third.

The competition, directed by Col. W. M. Craigie, professor of military science and tactics, was one of a series of inter-school cadet contests. Judges were Lieuts. Oscar G. Kreiser, William S. Humphries and Joseph S. Kujawski, attached to the Thirty-fourth Infantry at Fort Meade, Md.

Six of the seven high schools, Western, Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, Eastern, McKinley and Central, were represented by two battalions, and Anacostia by one.

Next Monday, at 3:30 p. m., the schools will compete in the regimental and band competition. Dr. Thomas W. Gosling, assistant superintendent of schools, will present the medals and decorations. Last week Company D, Central, led by Capt. Philip Cardon, took first honors in the "war games" test.

be drugged on May 25, 1937, when she set up a trust fund of $230,000 as a prenuptial settlement on him.

"I never knew Pepita to seem drugged at all," Stinson replied. "Sometimes at night, after her engagement, when I was in her bedroom, she would send me away with the announcement that she must take her medicine. And at breakfast time she had something clear in a glass, but it did not occur to me it might be a drug," he declared.

Gets Topaz for Ring

Stinson said he became engaged to Mrs. Crounse on March 28, 1937, following his divorce from a former wife in Reno on March 15. He gave her a topaz for an engagement ring, he said, but when they went to get a setting she saw a star sapphire which she purchased because she liked it better.

He declared the two met through the arrangement of "friends who said we had much in common, both being fond of music and the arts." The first money he received from her, he declared, was $1,000 on April 12, which was "compensation for the legal advice I had been giving." The next large amount, he said, was $1,200 on May 24.

A week-end at Atlantic City with Miss Shoemaker was taken at the suggestion of Mrs. Crounse, who was in the hospital and wanted him to rest and the nurse to clear up some Oriental rug deals in that city, he said.

Asked why Miss Shoemaker signed the trust agreement, Stinson said: "She was not even there." Justice Luhring pointed out that her name was signed to the papers, but Carrol L. Beedy, Stinson's attorney, said: "We're going to explain that tomorrow."

When giving up his apartment, Stinson said, he had given his bank the address of Miss Shoemaker on Wyoming avenue as the place to send statements of his account. He did this, he said, "because I did not want to embarrass Mrs. Crounse by giving her address."

Whenever the name of her first husband, William Crounse, was mentioned during the early days of their acquaintanceship, Stinson said, "Pepita would burst into tears." This seemed natural to him at the time, which was before he knew she had considered that Crounse "kept her a prisoner" and before he had learned that she was suffering from "an undisciplined mind," he said.

Stinson, only witness of the afternoon, brought with him an abundance of canceled checks, hotel bills, a calendar, and other paraphernalia documented to prove his claim as to dates and sums mentioned. His testimony will be resumed at 10 a. m. today.

day, and was scheduled to arrive here in 18 hours. The actual elapsed time was 17 hours and 6 minutes.

8,000 to 9,000 Feet Altitude

Most of the trip was made at altitudes of 8,000 and 9,000 feet, with a cruising speed of 165 miles per hour. Clouds obscured the sea part of the way, but the sun was shining when the aerial boat, which carried 4,500 gallons of gasoline, a crew of 12 and 9 private and Government observers, made a perfect landing and taxied to her buoy.

Gray indicated that several brief test flights will be made here. A ground crew will calibrate instruments and instruct base personnel at the landing fields along the clipper's route.

The clipper has a passenger capacity of 74, cabin space equivalent to the area of a five-room house, four motors which generate 1,500 horsepower each and a dining lounge where 15 persons may be served at a time.

Lithuania Cabinet Which Gave Memel To Nazis Resigns

Kaunas, Lithuania, March 27 (AP). The cabinet of Premier Vladas Mironas, which last week agreed to cession of Memel to Germany, resigned today following upon demands for formation of a united front government "to face the German menace."

President Antanas Smetona called on Gen. J. Cernius, chief of staff of the army, to form a new cabinet. The new government is expected to embrace all parties in order to calm the political anger stirred up by the loss of Memel.

The Mironas cabinet, which was formed March 24, 1938, was requested to remain in office until formation of the new government.

Bowers Reported Slated for Peru Ambassadorship

By International News Service.

Official quarters yesterday reported an important Latin-American diplomatic post may be offered Claude G. Bowers, now Ambassador to the Spanish republic.

An authoritative source said a plan entailing an exchnage of posts by Bowers and Jefferson T. Caffery, Ambassador to Brazil, has been shelvde.

Some diplomatic quarters believe Bowers may be named Ambassador to Peru, a post left vacant by confirmation of Laurence A. Steinhardt as Ambassador to Moscow.

Bowers said yesterday his only wish is to "get back to my native Indiana, the most wholesome place in the country." After his European experience, he said he felt need of a "spiritual bath."

The Ambassador described the Spanish civil war as "the greatest tragedy visited on a people in 200 years." He said the havoc visited upon the cities demonstrated that "civilians in the next war will suffer equally with troops in the lines."

Writer Slugged At Council Session

Cumberland, Md., March 27 (AP).—A fistic flare-up in the mayor's office marked a city council conference today with T. Donald Shires, a newspaper reporter, being hurled to the floor in an altercation with Finance Commissioner Thomas F. Conlon.

Councilmen quickly intervened and prevented an exchange of blows.

The altercation started after Conlon said he had been misquoted by Shires in the Friday erition of the Cumberland Evenings Times. Shires replied that he had written only what took place at Friday's council meeting, and denied misquoting Conlon.

At that point, witnesses said, Conlon arose from his chair and Shires taken unawars, was knocked off his feet.

House Passes 9 District Bills; $10,000 Sought for Milk Quiz

The House yesterday passed nine District bills and accepted the Senate version of a tenth measure after the House District Committee had directed Chairman Randolph (Democrat), of West Virginia, to ask $10,000 for a milk investigation.

The entire District-day session occupied only 13 minutes and was interrupted only by a brief attack on the Public Utilities Commission by Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, a member of the District Committee.

Schulte, who was rebuffed last summer by the commission when he appeared in behalf of the Independent Taxi Owners Association, operators of Diamond Cabs, complained of the "antagonistic attitude" of the utilities body.

Would Curb P. U. C. Powers

He said he would favor a curb of the powers of the commission.

By receding on its amendment, the House agreed to the reinstatement of David Thompson and Ralph Warner in the eMtropolitan Police Department without back pay. The Senate had refused the reimbursement, which would have amounted to $20,000.

Eight of the nine bills passed by the House have been approved by the Senate and now go to the White House. Three have to do with the administration of the public schools. One of these provides for the appointment of research assistants, the second for adjustment of appointments in the white and colored divisions, and the third for amendment of the teachers' retirement act to require designation of beneficiaries.

One bikll provides alternate methods of enforcing orders of the joint board and the Public Utilities Commission and, in effect, enables the commission to enforce its regulations through police channels rather than civil suits.

Protection of banks against unreasonable damage suits is provided in a bill amending the District code in several particulars.

Two minor bills authorize the District Commissioners to buy steam for the Municipal Center from the central heating plant and reduce the allowable margin of error from 4 to 2 per cent on electric meters. A third measure changes the taxicab licensing date to March 1.

Representative Randolph said he will take up the request for $10,000 for the milk inquiry with Chairman Warren, of the House Accounts Committee, early this week.

The estimate for the investigation was raised abruptly from $2,500 to $10,000 over Randolph's bojection and upon insistence of committee members from northwestern and midwestern States.

Indications that these members will push the demands of western dairymen for employment of the District law barring uninspected cream and milk were evdient as Representatives Shafer (Republican), of Michigan; Bolles (Republican), of Wisconsin, and Schulte complained that a local milk monopoly exists.

Sponsors of the larger estimate expressed the opinion that investigators should be able to go into the dairy districts of the Midwest as well as those of this milkshed.

Conspiracy Charged

Schute charged that a conspiracy exists in Washington "to keep any independent dealer from selling milk on the Washington market," while Bolles complained of the high price, asserting that western milk could be transported to the Capital and sold for 12 cents a quart.

The District Committee, reversing a previous action, and voted to report favorably a bill to place District firemen on a 5-day, 60-hour week. Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal revealed that the commissioners no longer object to the proposal providing they are given free rein to regulate the platoon shifts.

Representative Seccombe (Democrat), of Ohio, asked whether Rufus F. Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers' Association, is "a paid lobbyist for the real estate interests" after Chairman Randolph read a letter from Lusk pointing out that the shorter week would cost local taxpayers $500,000 a year.

Wolf Seigel, Grocer, Succumbs at 63

Wolf Seigel, 63, resident of this city for 35 years, died yesterday at Emergency Hospital after an illness of two weeks. He was proprietor of a grocery at Eighth and E streets southwest.

He is survived by his wife, Rebecca, and five sons, Nathan, Benjamin, Alec, Herman and Sameul. Services will be held at 2 p. m. today at Danzansky's funeral home, 3501 Fourteenth street northwest. Burial will be in the Ohev Sholom Cemetery.

Fire Chief Renamed

Hagerstown, March 27.—Max Hoover, fire chief, has been reelected to that position by the unanimous vote of the five volunteer fire companies here. The recommendation of the fire companies will be passed upon this week by the Mayor and City Council, which usually approves the recommendation.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Woman Finds Seasonal Hordes of Unasked House Guests a Nuisance; Asks How to Protect Herself

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Now that spring is here, and seasonal migrations in order, I wish you would say a word to stiffen the spine of those poor mortals who, like myself, are perennially at the mercy of predatory friends who turn up on one's doorstep blandly taking a welcome for granted. It is true I have a guest room and a maid, and that I drive a car—items of tremendous convenience for acquaintances who find it possible or interesting to stop over in Washington.

Now, my natural tendency is to love my friends (even some of my mere acquaintances); my instincts prompt me to be hospitable; and I was trained to be polite. Unfortunately, however, I am not gifted with a great amount of savoir faire. I cannot think quickly of glib excuses, and am a very poor hand at getting gracefully out of trying situations.

Although I am inclined to be truthful, I find it hard (in fact, impossible) to say to uninvited guests: "Look here, I like you immensely and am delighted to have you to dinner and to spend an afternoon (perhaps even two afternoons) with you, but I have already seen Mount Vernon and Arlington and the Capitol and the museums 60 times, and we really aren't wealthy even if we do keep a maid. Furthermore, I am not as idle as I look. I keep a maid in order to pursue a hobby which, up to now, the business of rearing a family has kept me from undertaking. Please find nice quarters elsewhere. It may not be so economical for you, but it will go a long way toward preserving our friendship and besides, will be a great savings of my not-too-robust nervous strength." No, I can't say that.

Can you suggest another way? Remember, these "friends" usually give no notice of their coming. Or, if they do, they wire just as they are leaving, so that Ihave no opportunity to forestall them. One friend stayed for four weeks. Another wrote last fall that she was coming and would like, if I could have her, to stay "a day or two" with us. Forseeing a possible repetition of the other experience, I wrote back promptly and invited her to stay a week. She stayed three weeks. "Why not?" She must have argued. How could she be any trouble? My husband was away on a business trip; I had a maid, and weren't we friends? Perhaps you, Miss Haworth, will also wonder—why not? But the fact was that I wanted her for a week and then I wanted to be free to go my own way.

What, I ask you, can one do? I would like to keep my friends, be hospitable and yet maintain both dignity and truthfulness. Am I trying to eat my cake and have it, too? But even if you light into me as being spineless—I suspect I am—I wish you would open up a discussion of this problem. Perhaps it will deter certain persons who read it, from making an uninvited visitation upon distant friends. If so, I shall not have written in vain.

LONG SUFFERING.

Manhattan's Technique

DEAR LONG SUFFERING: Some time ago I read an article in a national magazine of sophisticated content which told how nimble-witted New Yorkers were circumventing thoughtless or conscienceless acquaintances, friends or relatives who arrive in Manhattan by plane, train, bus or motor with the transparent intention of seeing the sights sans hotel expense. That is to say, by descending upon somebody or other as an uninvited house guest for a visit of indeterminate length. They were obviating this painful possibility, the article stated, by the simple device of eliminating guest rooms or discernible overnight guest space from their homes or apartments.

I cannot say if it is pure coincidence, but I happen to know of more than one instance in which former residents of New York City are now living in Washington in homes deliberately planned to lodge members of their immediate households and not one additional intrusive soul. One woman, who took over a house of moderate size a few years ago, tactfully disguished what the architect must have intended as an extra bedroom into a second floor work room and study. That is provided sleeping accomodations was a secret guarded by the mistress of the home, who had furnished it with sepcially and most economically constructed objects of her own design, including a velvet-upholstered couch which one would never suspect could become a double bed, and a work-stuffed desk that could become, surprisingly, a dressing table with capacious drawer space. A typewriter, business-like filing cases, book shelves, etc., gave it the overt apperance of a room dedicated to inviolably personal usages. It cried no welcome to the uninvited guest.

Another family, that has taken a spacious apartment in Washington each winter for the past several years, preempts all floor space for the family—as against uninvited guests—by the casual device of furnishing two living rooms, one for the elders and their friends and the other for the use of the youngsters and their circle. Add to this sufficient bed rooms to accomodate the family, a dining room, perhaps a work room or study, and a medium sized or even small family can fill to overflowing (seemingly) an apartment or rather imposing dimensions.

or Fthose who, like yourself, haven't the ready wit to talk themselves out of uninvited and unfeasible (or unwelcome) house guests, the only samety lies in taking refuge behind such precautionary arrangements as I have outlined above. Then, when persons arrive unheralded, or give last-minute warning of a projected disturbing invasion, you may deplore your inability to take them in, and immediately and most obligingly concern yourself with finding them convenient quarters in the city. You might do a bit of telephoning, suggest hotels, etc., etc., say that you must have them for dinner on such-and-such a day, and or for lunch and a matinee another day, recommend certain tours as being of special interest, an' generally give evidence of a friendly interest which is not to be confused with and which does not assume the responsibilities of obligatory hospitality.

It seems to me it should be a fairly simple matter for the average Washington householder to defend her home against hordes of uninvited house guests in spring, through widely publicizing the fact—from coast to coast, if necessary—that she is seasonally engrossed in spring housecleaning. I, personally, do not believe that civility need ever be strained to the point of playing the role of unpaid innkeeper to inconsiderate relatives and acquaintances. I think that anyone who attempts to trade on acquaintanceship, through treating somebody else's home as a tourists' lodging (gratis), has more than asked for the suave rebuke of having his intentions adroitly thwarted.

Weight Loss Delay Often Caused by Water Storage; No Cause for Discouragement

SO MANY reducing programs that start off in a blaze of enthusiasm flicker out after the first two or three weeks because it is psychologically impossible to keep on being enthusiastic when nothing happens.

The reducers who lose on schedule don't realize how lucky they are. The loss of three to fve pounds in the first two weeks of a diet is all the encouragement anyone needs to go ahead with the entire program. But those of you who can only lose a pound or so, and some of you not even that, are always convinced that you are constitutionally fat.

It's Too Much Water

You are not. Failure to lose weight on a low calorie diet is caused by just one thing: You are storing water which prevents the registration of your weight loss. It does not mean that you can't reduce. If you are on a low calorie diet, you are losing no matter what the scales tell you. But the only way you can prove it is to figure out your calorie deficit over a certain length of time.

For example, we will suppose that your daily diet is 600 calories below your normal requirement. Multiply the 600 by the number of days and then divide by 4,000, the number of calories it takes to make up a pound. Your body keeps on using the same number of calories as usual on a diet and if these calories are not supplied in food, the body's fat is converted into energy.

You can always account for your diet. What can't be accounted for is water storage. Sometimes it occurs at the beginning of the diet, sometimes later on when the program has always gone smoothly. One young woman went on a diet of 1,500 calories and her weight remained right where it was on her normal intake of 2,300 calories. The 800 calorie deficit did bring about an abrupt change in weight during the first two days but for the next 11 days the scales did not budge. Then suddenly she began to lose and the scales registered to the pound all the weight she should have lost in that period.

Week About the Limit

This water retention can't go on forever. The longest period ever reported was 16 days, and usually it is only for a week. The worst thing about it is that you do not always realize that you have really lost weight when you have been faithful to your diet and start overeating again before the reduction can be registered.

Don't be discouraged, even though you may not have lost for two weeks. When this water is lost from the system, there will be a big change in your weight and you will feel well repaid for your patience and determination.

April Bride—in Molyneaux Manner

Capt. Molyneaux, the British-French coutourier, created the elegant bridal gown, above. With the same unerring good taste which has endeared him to such great ladies as the Duchess of Kent and other "best dressers," Molyneaux has created the ivory satin gown with only its own self-trimming for detail interest. Shirring accents the vast puffed sleeves and new low waistline—both features well adapted to the tall, very slim figure. The veiled chaplet of posies, looking like a Botticelli madonnas' halo, show the chic and restraint of Lily Daches fine hand. New York 'Copettes' Could Get Jobs As Chorus Girls

New York, March 27.

OUR SMALL hunk of mayor, who is all dynamite, shot out a forefinger and barked in his high-pitched voice.

ALICE HUGHES

It wasn't an audience of bull-necked flatfeet Hizzoner LaGuardia was addressing in this menacing manner. It was, contrarywise, a group of 20 pretty girls who might have been answering a call for chorus kids instead of taking the oath as police ladies of the metropolis. All were under 30, in fine physical fettle, and not a few wore hats as frivolous-like as any Stork Clubber's.

Then Boss Cop Valentine had his say to this little group of survivors of the 3,000 women who applied for jobs on the force last fall. "Don't put on weight," he told the novices. "Stay as you are, and get all the exercise you can." The new copettes listened attentively to this sage advice.

They raised their right hands, solemnly swore, and the ceremony was over. The girls now start earning their $2,000 a year, with an eventual boost to $3,000, with a sure pension after 20 years on the force. They were told that most of them would spend their first summer on uniformed duty at the World's Fair—no doubt to keep visitors from selling the Empire State Building to native New Yorkers.

Who's coming back to town but the perennial Alla Nazimova, the Russian star not locally visible since '36. She propose to play the title role in Karel Kapek's last play, "The Mother," now a London hit . . . And Katie Hepburn opens here tonight in her new hit, "The Philadelphia Story"—her first Broadway venture since the freckled one fell into "The Lake" some years back.

Murry Hill, where I live (if it can actually be called "living") is a perfect nest of men's clubs. The Union League, Princeton, Williams, Dartmouth are just a few.

Teach Yourself Shorthand

WHO GETS the vacancy on the stenographic staff? "One of our own people for once," you say, as the office manager picks one of the routine workers for the job.

But almost every executive prefers to promote employes rather than take outsiders. A girl has only to show fitness, pluck, training. Learn the elements of shorthand at home—and see how your office rating jumps.

Yes, you can teach yourself shorthand—mysterious though its "curlicues" may appear to you now.

Pitman shorthand is based on the sounds of our language instead of on longhand spelling. And though we have many words, there are few sounds, so you see it is no great task to learn the shorthand symbols for them.

Quickly you grasp them by practicing a few each day. Write each several times until it is thoroughly fixed in your mind.

Interesting and helpful to have a friend join you in your shorthand course. You can write simple shorthand notes to each other. If yours are easily read, you know you make symbols accurately, that you can follow your notes on the job. Have dictation "periods" too—testing your speed.

But alone or with someone else you'll find yourself progressing rapidly. In Pittman shorthand there are short symbols for whole words and phrases commonly used. They'll help you keep pace with your employer even in rapid dictation.

And when you make the grade, have your job, be neat and businesslike. Date your notebook every morning. Snap a rubber band around used pages, so you'll always have an unfilled page ready.

Be ready for the next job opportunity. Our 40-page booklet, "Pitman Shorthand Self-Taught, clearly explains the Pitman system gives in 15 step-by-step lessons the symbols and exercises you need for a working knowledge of shorthand.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, "Pitman Shorthand Self-Taught." to The Washington Post Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth Street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

Lame Ducks

"Say, what became of that Mr. Periwinkle?"

"I don't know. I never see him any more."

"What's the matter? I thought he was nice."

"Well, the truth is—he had a wife."

"You don't mean it! Didn't he tell you?"

"Well—not at first. It seems he was separated or something—and she wouldn't give him a divorce. Anyway, it was the same old story."

"What do you mean?"

"Well—you know I never said this to a soul before, but honestly it just seems as if every man who likes me—well, there's always something the matter with him."

"Say! I thought I was the only one that had that happen to them!"

"No, indeed. I've been that way all my life. I just might as well confess it. I always draw a joker."

"Now, isn't that funny! I've had exactly the same experience, but I never had nerve enough to admit it."

"Well, I don't believe it's true of you. Now there was that Mr. Bobbin. I thought he was sweet."

"Yes, but he didn't have a job. Well, as far as that is concerned, what was the matter with that Mr. Cheesit, who gave you such a rush—the one that had all that money?"

"Say, do you know how old he was? 64! And he had grandchildren—and false uppers."

"I guess that's always the way. Take Bob Bunch, now he was young enough—"

"Oh, say, I thought he was terribly attractive."

"Yes, but he was always drunk and—well, I didn't think I'd ever tell this, but—he was always borrowing money."

"Do they borrow money from YOU, too? You know, I never did tell anybody this, but that Mr. Rutabaga—the one that said he was a count—well, he was that way."

"What ever became of Mr. Rutabaga?"

"I don't know. I suppose he's in jail somewhere. He disappeared all of a sudden."

"Who was that good looking fellow I saw you with at the movie?"

"THAT! Oh, that was Clarence Bash. You know how old he is? 22!"

"They're always too old or too young."

"Not always. There was that Mr. Spruceberry you had. Now he was a nice age."

"Say, you know how much allmony he had to pay? $100 a month! I tell you there's always a joker."

"Joker! Listen, do you know what happened to me? I've never told ANYBODY this, but you know that Mr. Timkle that gave me such a rush? Well, he was arrested for bigamy."

"No! You know I've always wondered if that Mr. Rutabaga didn't have somebody cut up in a trunk somewhere. He acted so mysterious, and anyway it would be just like me to attract such a man."

"Well, after all I wouldn't mind so much if they were just rascals, but it does seem as if the ones who like me are always—well, a little off or something."

"You're not the only one! Let me tell you something. You know that Mr. Elderdown, who was so nice and wrote all that poetry?"

"I'm always suspicious of 'em when they write poetry. What was the matter with him?"

"He simply couldn't hold a job because he was always an hour late everywhere. He said the doctor said he wasn't integrated."

"I've had some like that, too. You remember that Mr. Heelby, who was always being psychoanalyzed? And then that painter, that Austin Upper, who was always broke and sleeping in people's bathrooms? And then Lem Nitter, you know, who had that crush on his mother and kept all those parrots? Now what I want to know is—why do men like that always pick on me?"

"Why do they pick on me?"

"You know I just wonder sometimes if there's really a man in the world who's not too old or too young, and who's not married, and who doesn't have to pay alimony, and who isn't fat, and who's not a drunk, and who's got good sense and a good job and—well, who wants to get married?"

"Well, if there is—I haven't met him."

Lack of Vitamins in Diet Is Seen As Cause of Heart Trouble

IN CHILDREN the lack of vitamins which come in fresh fruits, oils and cereals and green vegetables is far more striking than the lack of such vival factors in adults. An interesting feature of it is the occurrence of heart trouble secondary to vitamin deficiency.

Heart failure was a regular part of the disease caused by deficiency of vitamin B, beri-beri. It was charactized by general feebleness of the circulation, palpitation on the slightest exertion, enlargment of the liver and dropsy. Lately children's specialists have raised the question as to whether certain cases of enlargement of the heart may not be due to the same vitamin B, deficiency. Some children showed enlargement of the heart, with sluggishness, slow response to stimulation and a history of deficient diet. All of these symptoms improved after adding vitamin B, in the form of cereals or yeast, to the diet.

The cause of scurvy is lack of vitamin C, which is found in fresh fruit juice, especially lemons, tomatoes and oranges. In a large number of children in Vienna who had scurvy, as a result of the restricted rations after the World War there was enlargement of the heart and sometimes a fatal termination from heart failure. Heart failure can be produced experimentally in animals who have been fed a deficient diet and have had scurvy produced.

In still another form of vitamin deficiency due to lack of vitamin D, which is found in fish oils especially cod liver oil, there was also discovered symptoms which point to heart failure.

Child Cured

A typical case, reported by a physician in the neighborhood, was that of a mountaineer's child in Kentucky, aged 7 years, who presented an extremely emaciated appearance, with dry, thickened, pale skin and a sunken, aged face; his pulse was very weak and very rapid, the heart enlarged, and murmurs could be heard. He had obviously been eating a ration which was deficient in many vitamins, particularly vitamin D. His recovery on a well-balanced diet and rest was striking. He gained 9 pounds in weight during the two months he was in hospital residence, his skin became normal in color and texture, and his face round and youthful.

WASHINGTON'S HOME MORNING NEWSPAPER

Noted Physician-Writer To Be Feted in Capital

Author of Best-Seller, 'The Horse and Buggy Doctor,' Will Be Feted at Stag Affair by Dr. White; Coming to Washington Tomorrow

By Hope Ridings Miller.
The Post Society Editor.

INTO TOWN tomorrow for a brief visit will come one of America's most famous men—Dr. Arthur E. Hertzler, physician and writer, whose best-known book, "The Horse and Buggy Doctor," stayed on best-seller lists for weeks last year.

Dr. Hertzler will be the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Charles Stanley White in their home in Sixteenth street. Tomorrow, Dr. White will entertain at a large stag luncheon in compliment to Dr. Hertzler. Among the guests will be a number of Washington's outstanding physicians and surgeons.

Every medical student and every physician in this country can expound at length on the work of Dr. Hertzler, who has written 12 medical textbooks; has put his home town, Halstead, Kans., on the medical map, and has developed a smooth, lucid literary style that makes even his technical treatises interesting reading for the layman. "The Horse and Buggy Doctor" is, of course, a "must" for everybody.

Just how long Dr. Hertzler will be in Washington is not yet known. eH is expected to stay over for a day or two and probably will do a bit of sightseeing in some of the Government departments before he leaves.

Anothr noted doctor and writer who is expected to visit in Washington this spring is Dr. Victor Heiser, whose autobiography, "An American Doctor's Odyssey," made best-seller lists a couple of years ago. Dr. Heiser has been in the Capital several times since then; never stays long, although he has an extensive circle of friends here and always is widely feted.

Speaking of books by and about doctors—two that will be making a lot of table talk for the next few months are "Doctor, Here's Your Hat," an autobiography by Dr. Joseph A. Jerger, and "Doctor Bradley Remembers," a novel by Francis Brett Young."

Manns Sailing Soon For South America

While many noted visitors will be flocking to the Capital within the next few weeks and on through spring, some of our most distinguished citizens will be leaving. Take Dr. and Mrs. William M. Mann, for eample. They will be off for New York next week and will sail from there April 8 for a three-months' sojourn in South America.

The director of the National Zoological Park never travels just for the fun of it, but finds his fun in adding new animals to the Zoo collection. He expects to come back with several new ones from the Argentine, where he and Mrs. Mann will spend some time.

While we're on the subject of Dr. Mann—he will be host at a luncheon tomorrow at the Zoo when his guests will be Mary Alice Stoddard, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lothrop Stoddard, and several of her classmates from Holton-Arms School. Following the luncheon the company will make a tour of the Zoo. What fun!

Cummingses Return From Vacation

The former Attorney General and Mrs. Homer S. Cummings are back at Ruthven, their home on Tilden street, after a vacation in Florida. They left for the South after a round of parties in their honor following his resignation; stayed several weeks in Boca Grande, Fla., and then stopped in Augusta, Ga., and other Southern points before coming on to Washington.

Since Mr. and Mrs. Cummings are among Washington's most popular couples, scores are glad they have returned and will make their home here, where the former A. G. will practice law in partnership with William Stanley.

HERE AND THERE: Admiral and Mrs. Edward C. Kalbfus, who formerly lived here, are completing plans to make their home in Newport, R. I., where Admiral Kalbfus will assume his duties as president of the War College early in July. Now commander of the battle force, he is with the fleet in the Caribbean, but is expected to return from there shortly and will be present at the formal opening of the New York World's Fair . . . Ralph Totten, former United States Minister to the Union of South Africa, will entertain at a cocktail party on April 1 . . . Mrs. William O. Douglas, wife of the nenwly appointed Justice of the Supreme Court, will be feted at a number of parties this week. Miss Mary V. Johnson will entertain at a luncheon for her tomorrow . . . The Undersecretary of State and Mrs. umner Welles have cards out for a dinner on April 22.

Betty Barnhill, Mr. Clark Wed

At a quiet ceremony at noon on Saturday Miss Betty Barnhill, daughter of the Countess Raoul d'Adhemar and the late John D. Barnhill, of New York, became the bride of Chauncey Robert Clark, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey R. Clark, of Miami Beach.

The wedding took place in St. John's Episcopal Church, with Dr. Oliver J. Hart, rector of the church, officiating. There were no attendants.

The bride was given in marriage by her uncle, Richard Barler, her mother's brother. She was gowned in white satin fashioned on empire lines, with a long train. Over the bodice of the gown was a tiny jacket of point venice lace. Her veil of tulle was long, covered the train and was caught to her hair by a halo cap of tulle and sprays of orange blossoms. She carried gardenias and lilies of the valley.

The mother of the bride was gowned in black sheer with a black hat and a gardenia corsage. The father of the bridegroom was present for the ceremony, as were the bridegroom's two sisters, Mrs. Robert Caldwell and Mrs. A. C. Elliott.

Due to the recent death of the bride's stepfather, Count d'Adhemar, the ceremony was quiet and unannounced, with only closest friends of the families in attendance. There was no reception or wedding breakfast.

Immediately following the ceremony the couple left for Florida and will sail at the end of the week for a honeymoon in Nassau. They will make their winter home in Miami Beach.

Funeral services for Harry Rutledge Howser, 75, retired railroad official, will be held at 10 a. m. today at St. Matthew's Catholic Church. Mr. Howser died Saturday after a long illness.

He was born on a train that was evacuating the town of Relay, Md., during the Civil War. Alexandria's New Tax Forms Are Explained

Sixth Ward Citizens Hear C. H. Callahan Outline Their Uses

The Washington Post Bureau,

Charles H. Callahan, Commissioner of Revenue, advised a meeting of the Sixth Ward Citizens' Association last night on the use of new forms which have been prepared for making returns of tangible and intangible personal property in the city. R. G. Koiner, president of the association, presided.

Members of the association had requested Callahan to explain the forms, and stated that some of its members, especially those who have recently moved to the city, are wondering whether this is a plan for increasing taxes to be collected.

Instead of estimating the value of household furniture, and the value of store fixtures, and other related articles in a lump sum, the new form requires that furniture in each room of a residence, and such fixtures as counters and shelving in stores, be listed separately. The form also specifies the method of arriving at the value of such property as "the price which would be paid to a person not compelled to sell by one who is not compelled to buy."

The forms were modeled, it was explained, by City Manager Carl L. Budwesky, after those used by other Virginia cities, and go into much greater detail than the form previously used. The forms were approved by the city council at a recent meeting.

County Treasurer Charles T. Jesse announced yesterday that the deadline for payment of poll taxes to vote in the primary August 1 and the general election in November will be Saturday, May 6. He stated that 10,000 will be qualified to vote this year.

In explaining who may vote at the coming election, on all county offices excepting that of clerk, whose term runs for a period of eight years, Jesse said:

"In order to be qualified to vote a person must have been a resident of the State at least a year and of the county six months, must have paid all capitation taxes assessable against him, if any, for the three preceding years, and must be registered.

"Any one who would be qualified to vote in the general election, which is always held on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, is qualified to vote in the preceding primary on the first Tuesday in August.

"Capitation taxes like other taxes, are assessed as of January 1 and payable prior to December 5 without penalty. On the following June all taxes begin to bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent.

"A person becoming of age during the election year is required to pay the capitation tax for the succeeding year, whereas a person moving into the State after January 1 of the previous year is not required to pay a capitation tax as a prerequisite to vote.

"A person moving from one county to another or a precinct to another must get a transfer, except that a person may vote in his old precinct if he moved therefrom within 30 days."

Soil Affects Hydrangeas

College Park—If the attractive pink hydrangea shrubs you bought turns blue or vice versa, it may be the fault of the soil, says Walter R. Ballard, University of Maryland horticulturis.t

Experiments have shown that chemical reactions of the soil in which the hydrangea is planted affect their color. Ballard states that pink colors develop in alkaline soils and blue in acid soils.

If you want pink, the horticulturist suggests adding lime to the soil. If, however, you prefer blue, add peat moss, oak leaves, rusty nails, alum or aluminum sulfate—anything to furnish acidity. The color change will take several weeks.

The system won't work on the white variety of hydrangea, however, according to Ballard.

Maryland Revenue Bill Reported Out

Measure Faces Attack on Floor; Abramson Hits Interference

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., March 27.—Gov. O'Conor's $17,000,000 budget-balancing revenue program set off a long-threatened legislative explosion tonight when it was reported out favorably by the ways and means committee of the House.

Amended in committee, and with a deluge of other changes threatened from the floor, the tax bill still bore the general outlines of the revenue measure passed by the Senate.

As reported out, it included an increased automobile titling tax, an increased tax on beer, and other levies calculated to raise about $8,600,000 annually — slightly more than the estimate made for the original bill sent down by the Governor.

No sooner had the favorable report been read than Delegate Leon Abramson (Democrat), Fourth District, Baltimore, was on his feet to denounce "persons outside this Assembly" for making changes in the measure without "consulting me or anybody else in the Legislature."

His criticism was aimed specifically, he asserted, at last-minute rejection of an amendment which would have exempted unearned incomes of $1,000 or less from the provisions of the 6 per cent levy on dividends and interests.

Saturday, he said, the ways and means committee approved the amendment, "and now, today, as I walk into the statehouse, I hear it is unconstitutional and will affect $600,000 or $700,000 of revenue," he shouted.

"Saturday it was not unconstitutional. Two months ago, it wasn't unconstitutional. I've been fighting for it that long. Today, I hear that it is.

"I don't blame the floor leader, or members of the ways and means committee. I blame persons outside this Assembly. Saturday, they didn't have the votes. Today, I know I'm defeated. The big guns are around and they've got the votes here."

He opposed the entire revenue bill, he said, on grounds its classified income tax plan was unfair and represented "a tax on thrift in this State."

Abramson asserted the bill was drawn to fit the demands of various lobbyists, rather than in fairness to all classes of citizens.

"This whole program was enacted before we came down here," he cried. "It was drafted by a few people for us to accept whether we like it or not. Thank God I am in a State where I can lift my voice in protest against it."

Abramson mentioned a cigarette tax as one which might have been included in the revenue program, but which was not because of "opposition from southern Maryland."

An amendment to substitute a sales tax for the entire revenue bill, scattered opposition to various phases of the bill as it stood, and the independent amendments faced rough sledding because of the "gag" rule passed last week, limiting debate to five minutes.

The House reconvened early, in anticipation of the revenue battle, but the Senate, with two prime headaches on its hands, did not go into session until 8 p. m. Both houses still were operating on March 25, legislative time, since both simply recessed on Saturday.

The Senate's two battles, on a bill requiring licenses for sale or use of fireworks and another legislating State Employment Commissioner Harry C. Jones out of office, were extra obstacles to quick passage of the Governor's revenue and budget bills, in view of extended debate forecast on each.

Takes New Post

Coleman Quits Va. Senate For Legal Post

Named Prosecutor For Spotsylvania; V. M. I. Graduate

By the Associated Press.

Fredericksburg, Va., March 27.—State Senator S. Bernard Coleman submitted to Gov. Price today his resignation as a member of the Senate representing the Twenty-seventh Senatorial District, comprising the City of Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania, Louisa, Orange and Stafford counties.

Senator Coleman resigned from the Senate in order to take the office of Commonwealth's attorney of Spotsylvania County, succeeding E. R. Carner, who resigned March 15. Senator Coleman was appointed prosecuting attorney by Judge Frederick W. Coleman and qualified today.

Previously, it had been Senator Coleman's intention to seek re-election to he Senate this year but he had not made formal announcement of his candidacy. Thus far there is no announced candidate for the Senate from this district.

Senator Coleman was elected to the Senate in 1935, taking the seat formerly held by W. Worth Smith, jr., of Louisa. He defeated H. H. Walton, Louisa County businessman, in a closely contested primary campaign which resulted in a court contest by Walton in which Coleman's nomination was confirmed.

Senator Coleman, now 37, was the youngest member of the Senate during his term of office. His committee asignments were: Courts of justice; county, city and town organization; general laws; moral, social and child welfare, and enrolled bills.

He is a member of the State library building commission which position he will retain.

Senator Coleman, who has been practicing law here for 11 years, is a native of Spotsylvania County. He graduated from Virginia Military Institute and the University of Virginia Law School.

Va. Senator Charges Purge Plot

Page Says He's Marked by Norfolk Machine for Supporting Price

By the Associated Press.

Norfolk, Va., March 27.—The political cauldron began to simmer here today, fueled by an assertion from State Senator Vivian L. Page that an attempt to "purge" him was being made by the Norfolk City Democratic organization because he refused to join in an effort to "embarrass" Gov. Price at the last session of the General Assembly.

Senator Page, an announced candidate for renomination in the August primaries, charged that the organization intended to deny him its support because he sided with the administration bloc in the Legislature on the Coleman amendment. The Coleman amendment, ultimately defeateed, would have designated the Attorney General as a member of the State Compensation Board, thus denying to the Governor the privilege of appointing a member.

The Senator's assertions were contained in a formal statement issued in response to the announcement Saturday that former Mayor Albert L. Roper would manage the campaign of Ralph H. Daughton and W. Taylor Johnson and that the city organization would support them. Page, a member of the Senate since 1935, heretofore had the support of the local Democratic committee.

Although Page was a "last-minute" contestant for the gubernatorial nomination against Price in 1937, on several occasions since the Governor's inauguration he has pledged the Executive his whole-hearted support. And at the present, explaining his reasons for refusing to sanction the amendment, he said:

"I felt that Gov. Price, having been overwhelmingly elected by the people of Virginia, was entitled to my utmost support in his administration, and I refused point-blank to hamstring him, as I was led to believe the adoption of this amendment would do.

"Now, because I did what I honestly thought was right and my duty, there will be an attempt to purge me from the Senate of Virginia, a position which I have held since 1935, and the full burden of which fell upon me at the last session, due to the illness of my friend, the late Senator John A. Lesner."

Page added that he was in the race "to stay, yielding to no dictatorship from any clique, organization or faction."

The Norfolk Senator was a candidate for the nomination for Lieutenant Governor in a three-cornered Democratic race in which were also Saxon W. Holt, of Newport News, who was elected, and Senator Robert W. Daniel. Shortly before the primary election, however, he dropped out of the race for Lieutenant Governor and announced he would oppose Mr. Price. Page's campaign was based largely upon a plea for reduced automobile license taxes.

He polled approximately 30,000 votes. Gov. Price received in excess of 166,000.

Delamater Davis, now a member of the House of Delegates, from Norfolk, has also announced for one of the city's two Senate seats. There have been rumors that Joseph T. Deal, former State Senator and former Congressman, might also enter the race.

4 Lawyers in Race

Richmond, Va., March 27 (AP).—Walter L. Hopkins today became the fourth Richmond attorney to announce his candidacy for one of the six seats of the Richmond delegation in the House of Delegates.

Emahuel Emroch and Harry N. Phillips, jr., both lawyers, have made public their candidacies and Albert O. Boschen, one of the four remaining incumbents, has announced for renomination subject to the August 1 Democratic primary.

Col. Greene, Ex-Virginian, Is Dead at 69

Served as Engineer Officer With 77th Division in War

Col. Frederick Stuart Greene, 69, commissioner of public works of New York State since 1923 and known as the "father of concrete roads in New York," died in Emergency Hospital here Sunday night, only a few days after starting North from a Florida vacation.

A native of Rappahannock County, Va., a graduate of V. M. I., and former commissioner of highways, Col. Greene was well known in Virginia and maintained a home at Warrenton, where he lived as a boy.

In the World War he served in several major offensives and commanded a battalion of the Combat Engineers Regiment, Seventy-seventh Division. Under his supervision, the railway was constructed that permitted the return from the French forests of the "Lost Battalion."

First appointed to the New York State position by Alfred E. Smith in 1923, Col. Greene was reappointed by Franklin D. Roosevelt, Smith's successor, and Gov. Lehman.

Suffering from a blood ailment, he suffered a relapse on his way back from Florida, where he had gone for his health.

Funeral services will be held today in the chapel at Arlington Cemetery, where he will be buried.

Annapolis, Md., March 27 (AP).—J. Milton Tolle, Baltimore County Democrat and chairman of the House of Delegates judiciary committee, stepped forward today to claim the title of champion introducer of bills in the 1939 Legislature.

With the Assembly starting its last week, and rules suspension necessary for introduction of additional legislation, Tolle's record of 51 measures since January 4 appeared destined to stand without serious challenge.

Closest threat was the 44-bill total run up by Senator Emanuel Gorfine (Democrat), Fourth Baltimore, chairman of the senate judicial proceedings committee.

Virginia Jail Study Session Set Today

Legislative Group To Hear Experts On Prison Systems

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., March 27.—Authors of previous studies of the Virginia jail problem and related questions are expected to be among those attending a public hearing here tomorrow by the jail study sub-committee of the Legislative Advisory Council.

Dr. Floyd Nelson House, professor of sociology at the University of Virginia, who collaborated with Dr. Frank W. Hoffer, of the university, and Prof. Delbert M. Mann, professor of sociology at Scarritt College, in publishing "The Jails of Virginia" in 1933, notified the committee he planned to attend.

The three professors' study was published under the auspices of the University of Virginia Institute for Research in the Social Sciences.

Trade Group Protests Park Tolls

Bottom Assails Fee Plan for Skyline Drive, Shrine Visitors

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., March 27.—Maj. Raymond B. Bottom, of Newport News, president of the State Chamber of Commerce, protested to Secretary Ickes today against the proposed toll charges in the Shenandoah National Park and admission fees for Virginia shrines under the supervision of the National Park Service.

Maj. Bottom telegraphed the Secretary of the Interior, it was announced at the Chamber of Commerce offices here, that Virginia contributed the Shenandoah Park area to the Federal Government and expended more than $2,000,000 in acquiring the lands.

If any toll is to be charged, Maj. Bottom contended, Virginia should share equally in the receipts.

He argued that the Shenandoah Park area was not developed to the extent that Western parks are, and that the only attraction at present was the Skyline Drive. The proposed park service toll of $1 per year for each automobile and motorcycle entering the park, or a single entrance fee of 25 cents, would have a depressing effect on travel, Maj. Bottom added.

The telegram also entered a protest against proposed fees to be charged at the national military parks in Virginia and other shrines.

Previous proposals for charging admission fees to the Shenandoah Park were abandoned after Virginians advanced somewhat similar arguments, which emphasized that the Shenandoah stood apart from other governmentally acquired parks because of the fact it was State-contributed.

Youth, Trapped By Train on Span, Leaps to Safety

Cumberland, Md., March 27 (AP).—Forced to leap from a 50-foot railway trestle to escape a train which came roaring out of a tunnel, 12-year-old Norman Baumgardner was confined in a hospital tonight with a broken arm and internal injuries.

Trapped in the train's path because he was too far from the bank to out-run the locomotive, the boy took the only way out of his movie-like predicament.

He plunged into the shallow, rock-strewn Potomac River far below. A railroad bridge crew working nearby rescued the youth, and the train, stopped by the engineer who saw the lad leap from his path, brought him to Cumberland.

Mrs. Klenk, 78, Keeps Happy Through Her Service to Others

Smiling Widow Makes Vocation Of Giving Help and Good Cheer To Orphans and Sick Friends

(This series is about men and women 70 or older who are finding so-called "old-age" is really a lot of fun. They still are producing and getting a big thrill out of their work or hobbies. You know some qualifiers. Tell us who they are.—Editor's note.)

By Gerald G. Gross.

"I just must tell you," wrote Mrs. E. G. B., "of a remarkable young old lady who is a lifelong member of our church."

She went on to describe Mrs. Louisa Klenk, 78 on July 1, and how she delivers sunshine to the sick, sews for the orphans and works tirelessly for Concordia Lutheran Church. Mrs. E. G. B. was guilty of no overstatement.

"Mrs. Klenk is doing a great deal of good," says the Rev. Charles Enders, pastor of her congregation. "The sick love to have her call upon them. Undoubtedly the great interest she takes in others has much to do with keeping her as fit and jolly as she is."

She was found at 4604 Thirteenth street northwest, in the Mathilde and Dorothea Holliedt Home for Elderly Women, turning out aprons on a sewing machine.

Makes Aprons for Orphan Benefit

"These are to be sold at the German Orphan Home benefit bazaar next month," Mrs. Klenk smilingly explained. Whatever she has to say, she says it with a smile. Her good humor is contagious.

She was born in Georgetown and has lived here all her life. When she was married she went into a bakery stand at the old Center Market to help her husband and his two brothers, who were partners in the business. Later she kept a bakery stand at the Twenty-first and K streets market and then for 23 years she was in the Convention Hall Market at Fifth and K streets.

In 1921 her husband's health failed and she had to give up the business to care for him. When he died shortly afterward she went back to work—for others—to make her living. She lost her home, but was undismayed. Nothing gets her down.

About three years ago she moved into the Holliedt Home, which is primarily for the benefit of elderly women members of Concordia Lutheran Church, and last January she finally retired from market life after more than 49 years of it. Now she can devote all her time to visiting the sick, repairing and laundering the vestments used at her church, sewing for orphans and performing other duties for the church she loves so much.

Service "Brings Me Happiness"

"My parents were married in Concordia Luthern and it was there I was christened and married," she says. "To serve it brings me happiness."

The greatest tragedy of her life occurred in 1888, when her two children died on successive days of scarlet fever. Only when she thinks of them does that cheery smile leave her face. One was 5, the other 2.

Mrs. Klenk has never been sick.

"A few times, though, I've had indigestion," she amends.

Occasionally she attends a movie, but when she does it is with misgivings, because she can't help thinking that a good bit of crocheting can be accomplished in two hours, the length of the average film program.

Will H. Hays Observes The Cinema's Progress

Annual Report Cites Evidence of Growth; More Concerning Evans' Uncut 'Hamlet;' News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

WILL H. HAYS, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., expresses a profound confidence in the future of the American cinema in his report to the industry, made public today.

"It is proof of the fact that an entertainment art of the millions has risen to high estate that the best which the living theater has been able to produce, or which other artistry can create, is now demanded in the films," he states. "It is not so long ago that thrilling action for its own sake was considered satisfying 'movie'; that the custard pie was the symbol of hilarity and amusement on the screen; that the chase was sure-fire entertainment technique; that boy-meets-girl supplied all the drama that a motion picture audience apparently demanded."

BELL

It is different today.

Of the 545 feature-length pictures, produced under the industry's code of self-regulation last year, Mr. Hays discloses, 316, or 58 per cent, were from original screen stories, 26 per cent from novels and biographical works,, 10 per cent from current and other short stories, 5½ per cent from stage plays and the rest from miscellaneous sources.

The report calls attention to the fact that among the outstanding successes produced by American companies, here or abroad, were pictures that had the highest social as well as entertainment significance.

The gist of the whole thing, in brief, is that the "movies" have grown up. So splendid has been the development of the American cinema in recent years, in fact, that it seems high time to abandon that word "movies" as a relic of the old nickleodeon days and attribute to the screen virtues that conspicuously transcend the mere matter of movement.

Mr. Hays didn't say so, but that is the way we feel about it. That is why "movies" long has been taboo in these columns.

We are indebted to Edward Small, president of Edward Small Productions, Inc., for a copy of the novel, "My Son, My Son," motion picture rights to which have been secured by his company. "I would be grateful for any thoughts or opinions you may have concerning the filmization of the novel—whether you see the story through the eyes of the father or the son, and to whom the sympathy of motion picture audiences would naturally flow; whether the audiences will accept the character of Oliver as he has been created by Howard Spring; your ideas on the matter of casting." We are deeply grateful to Mr. Small for the copy of the book, which arrived before his letter, but, not having had time to read it, will have to defer consideration of the producing problems that confront him until a later date—not too much later, I hope.

The Washington Civic Theater has decided to present its forthcoming production of Euripides' "The Trojan Women" in modern dress. No lines will be changed and all references to Greek mythology will be kept intact in the script. However, the ladies of the title will not appear in flowing Grecian robes, nor will the soldiers be seen in their short-skirted tunics. The women will appear in modern garb and the men in uniforms.

This innovation, it is felt, will bring the subject matter of the play and its implications a little more vividly close to the present-day concentration camps of Europe.

Well, Orson Welles was able to do it with "Julius Caesar," so why not?

The Pierce Hall Players are holding open tryouts in Pierce Hall, Fifteenth and Harvard streets, at 8 o'clock tonight, for their impending production of "Stage Door," recent hit of both stage and screen—although in two widely different versions. Applicants for parts are urged to seek out Howard F. Wentworth, director.

So our old and erudite friend, Elmer Kenyon, former professor of English and drama at Carnegie Tech, huddles over his typewriter and writes as follows, in part, from the Hotel Bellevue, in Boston, under date of March 24:

"Dear Nelson: I hope that Washington playgoers are properly excited over the prospect of seeing Maurice Evans and his two triumphs of this season.

"Researching in the Harvard Theater Collection here to find if, possibly, there had been any vagrant performance of 'Hamlet' with all its scenes and lines as Shakespeare wrote it, I was unable to trace, even in this once theatrically venturesome city, any evidence that any earlier Maurice Evans had bethought himself to let playgoers see what Shakespeare's whole masterpiece would be like on the stage.

"I did find that Hamlets have wondered whether to be or not to be' on the Boston stage for 147 years at least. The play was presented as a 'Moral Lecture' (the cute way they had in those days of disguising the wicked commodities of the theater from the Town Fathers) on November 30, 1792. Sometimes there were as many as five "stars" presenting the Prince of Denmark in a single season. Yet none of them broke with the purely actor's tradition of hewing and hacking 1,000 lines or more from the play."

Mr. Kenyon, needless to say, is one of the unfailing aids to the drama desk's determination to "learn one thing each day."

Speaking of theatrical attractions that are not too far distant, it might be well to bear in mind that when the D'Oyly Carte Co. comes to town next week, it will be observing the golden jubilee year of Gilbert and Sullivan's "The Gondoliers." It was in 1839 that this gay operetta of Venetian life and customs was first produced. During its 50 years of continuous prosperity, it has been played nearly 10,000 times in all parts of the civilized world—and Germany. On Tuesday evening, April 4, the golden jubilee will be observed at the National Theater.

The New Yorker

JOHN DILLINGER'S father, Evelyn Nesbit, Jessie Costello and some of the Hauptmann jurors, are being signed for a World's Fair exhibit to be called "The Headlines of Yesterday in the World of Tomorrow." This depends upon the approval of License Commissioner Paul Moss . . . If the appellate division rules against Magistrate Rudich and removes him from the bench, Spec. Pros. Amen will call it quits and make no effort at criminal prosecution . . . Sidney Kingsley, who was fired from his $150-a-week Hollywood writing job four years ago—and then departed for New York to win a Pulitzer Prize—will return to Hollywood next week. Paramount will pay him $3,000 a week.

WHEN JOAN Crawford was a chorus girl here she met Tony de Marco, the dancer, who helped get her out of the chorus line by teaching her the Charleston . . . This single dance got her a new job at Harry Richman's Club, where a film-talent scout signed her to a movie contract . . . De Marco never taught Joan another dance step until "Shining Hour" was screened . . . The first scene in that movie shows Crawford dancing with Tony, the man who helped her get out of the chorus line . . . And Toney de Marco, one of the world's greatest ballroom dancers, got no screen billing.

PAUL WENDEL, the lawyer whose hoax confession postponed the Hauptmann execution and whose detention in a Brooklyn hotel as a material witness was the costliest in the history of the State, insists he still hasn't been paid his witness fees for that period. Wendel alleges that he hasn't been paid because Dist. Atty. didn't commit him legally . . . The Onyx Club, on W. 52d St., soon will find another club with the same name on the same street. Another group, renting the 18 Club— which is moving next door—will persist in using the "Onyx" name . . . Georgie Hale will be the producer of the new show at the International Casino . . . The Minsky's Roosevelt Theater is offering triple features.

ORSON WELLES tells of the days when he lived in Ireland and an Irish busboy won £5,000 in the Irish Sweepstakes . . . "You won the big prize in the Sweepstakes," the busboy was told . . . "Really?" was his calm reply . . . "You're rich," an interviewer declared. "You'll be able to quit your job" . . . "I won't quit it," the busboy assured . . . "You mean," he was asked, 'you want to hang on to a job as a busboy?" . . . "Yes," he replied, "—but I'm going to be awfully impertinent."

DALI, the surrealist who jumped through the Bonwit, Teller window —where his display had been altered—told Prince Obolensky that the reason he jumped was because the persons who had made the changes were standing nearby and he couldn't bear the thought of their presence . . . The Yacht Club Boys will appear at Chicago's Colony Club . . . Olsen & Johnson, who are co-producing a "Streets of Paris" show for Broadway, will ballyhoo it as "Annex to the World's Fair" . . . The patriotic urge has hit the manufacturers of phonograph recordings. Current plans call for the records now marketed as "Brunswick" and "Vocalion" to be changed to "Columbia" and "American."

THE NEWSPAPERS last week reported the arrest in Bel-Air, Calif., of Walter Graham. The police declared that this ended a five-year search for "The Phantom Burglar of Bel-Air," who had robbed the homes of at least 20 prominent film folk residing there . . . Unknown to the police, one Bel-Air resident actually saw this "Phantom" during the five-year hunt. That person is the wife of a noted newspaper figure, into whose home the burglar fled, armed, when the police were pursuing him . . . "If I'm ever caught," he stated at that time, "I'll tell a lot about those movie stars . . . They've collected a lot of insurance on jewels I stole. Those gems were junk—but the insurance companies paid big dough."

ALEXANDER Woollcott will write an article for every issue of the Atlantic Monthly this year . . . In June Woollcott will go to Callendar, Ontario, to visit Dr. Dafoe and the Quintuplets, in preparation for their next movie. He also will appear in the last newsreel Pathe will make before the company retires from that field for five years . . . The cast of "The American Way" will present their own one-act plays at the Center Theater each Sunday. They've banned movie scouts from all rehearsals . . . A Federal Grand Jury, operating in N. "Tell him we will provide for the care, maintenance and education of the entire tribe for many generations to come," the Federal officials promised . . . The translator reported this to the chief, who grunted . . . "And we will provide for the conservation of all the tribe's property," the officials continued . . . The chief grunted . . . "and every necessity will be provided for," the officials stated . . . The chief consulted with the translator . . . "Chief say okay," the translator informed, "but he want Ingersoll watch."

Washingtonian Is Supervising New Capra Film

Jim Preston, Capitol Veteran, on Coast for Sequel to 'Mr. Deeds'

By Frederick C. Othman.
United Press Hollywood Correspondent

Hollywood, March 27.—Jim Preston, who belies his dour face by having more friends perhaps than anybody else in Washington, D. C., supervised the erection of the Capitol of the United States today inside six of Columbia's biggest sound stages.

If he only had an umbrella he'd be a dead ringer for Neville Chamberlain. As it is he's a dignified influence upon Hollywood. As superintendent of the Senate press galleries for more than he likes to remember, Jim Preston was friend and father-confessor to every newspaperman in Washington. Then he became Senate librarian—and the speeches of the Senators improved 100 per cent. A couple of years ago, he took up new duties in the Federal Archives Building.

Proselyted by Capra

He was hard at work there a month or so ago, when Director Frank Capra and Author Sidney Buckman burst in on him. They were in Washington doing research on their new picture, "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," and wherever they inquired about anythnig connected with the Capitol, they were referred to him. He was a walking encyclopedia of law making; a storehouse of legislative lore. Upshot was that they persuaded him to take a leave of absence from his official duties and come to Hollywood as their technical director.

When we entered the studio today, there was Preston, dressed as usual in black coat, gray trousers and handsome cravat, supervising the carpenters, the cabinetmakers and the painters.

He stood on the floor of the Senate chamber, which has been built to scale, even unto the carved initials on the late Huey Long's desk. Preston had just finished diagramming the official snuff boxes, which fit on either side of Vice President Garner's dais, and he was worrying about the official Senate clock.

"It's got to have a lock on the dial," he said. "Ten years or so ago they caught some of the boys sneaking up to the clock and pushing the hands ahead, so they could adjourn an hour or so early and catch the ball game. There was quite a hullabloo about that and upshot was that the Senate clock was padlocked."

Begins Work April 4

The picture starts April 4, with James Stewart as the young man who is elected Senator and goes to Washington, where he bests some of the world's fastest thinkers, with the aid of his crafty secretary, Miss Jean Arthur.

Much of the action takes place inside the Senate chamber. Considerable more occurs in the press galleries themselves, and it is here that Jim feels peculiarly at home. He's keeping a close eye on the gaudy tile floors, the fireplaces and the saggy black leather couches upon which weary Washington correspondents traditionally take their ease.

He's also keeping tab on Hollywood's version of the National Press Club, because if a chair is out or place or the famous painting over the dining room door is missing he's pretty sure he'll get blamed when he goes home. The painting is worrying him a little. The The Press Club obtained it from a Pennsylvania avenue saloon—and you can guess the subject. Preston, in any event, isn't sure how the censors will feel about naked ladies, even when introduced for authenticity's sake.

Must Select Senators

In a few more days Jim must help Capra select Senators from the lists at central casting. This is going to be a ticklish problem. If he chooses men who don't look intelligent, he'll be in real hot water when he returns. His movie Senators can't be too handsome, on the whole; neither can they all be bald. Jim isn't talking much about that question, but he's thinking plenty. It's mighty easy to insult a Senator.

Jim did, however, offer us a job as a Washington correspondent. He said all we'd have to do was sit on a small stool in the gallery, over the Vice President's head, and there try to look intelligent, for $16.50 a day.

He said this shouldn't be too difficult, though he did recall the horrible moment of six years ago when we lost our balance and came within an eyelash of falling on the Vice President. That caused so much excitement that a lady correspondent next to us dropped her pencil, a heavy metal one, and it landed inches from Garner's head.

"Of course," Jim said, "we can't have anything like that here in our Senate. We've got to have dignity."

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, March 27.—Sinclair Lewis is in Hollywood and ready to go into the movies as an actor as well as a writer. He is here with John Wildberg to launch the new "Sinclair Lewis Productions Co.," which will include his services as a writer and, in the case of his play, "Angela Is 22," his appearance as an actor. Today there was a conference with Darryl Zanuck and also a discussion with David Loew, who is about to go in with United Artists, relative to taking over the new Lewis company's output.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Of course, the majority of Lewis' successful novels and plays, "Babbitt," "Arrowsmith," "Main Street" and "It Can't Happen Here," have already been filmed, but there is still "Angela Is 22" and Wildberg told me today that another comedy by Sinclair Lewis is nearly finished and would be a part of the deal now being discussed.

Long ago, when Paul Bern fell in love with Jean Harlow and married her, he was greatly interested in Ann Sothern and planned to make a star of her. So enthusiastic was he that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer signed Annie on a contract, but after six months they let her go. Now she is returning to M-G-M and, curiously enough, play the lead in "Dark Dame," a story Paul originally bought for little Harlow. Since the picture starts next Monday, Ann has had to bow out of "Five Came Back" at RKO and Lucille Ball steps into her place. Ed Marin is directing "Dark Dame" but when you see it it will have another title.

"The Life of Rudolph Valentino" crops up on the imposing list of new productions announced by Edward Small for United Artists release after a great many of us thought this would surely be dropped following Jack Dunne's death. As you probably remember Louis Hayward covered himself with dramatic glory when he stepped into poor Jack's role in "Duke of West Point"—but it would be hard to imagine him substituting again in the Valentino role. I really can not think of any actor currently on the screen who could successfully portray Rudy, and I can't help thinking that unless fate drops such a paragon into Small's lap he's due to have as much trouble finding a hero as Harry Cohn has had finding a "golden boy."

The landlady who laughed at trouble in "Love Affair" was only a bit, and not important enough even to be mentioned on the program. But I was so interested in this actress's performance that I investigated. Now she is playing a part in "Little Mother" with Ginger Rogers at RKO. Sunday, she said, was the first time she could enjoy the rain in California because she had just had her roof fixed after it had leaked for three years.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: The wedding day of Ilona Massey and Sam Katz draws nearer: Eleanor Powell's imitation of Jimmy Stewart at the Lamaze brought down the house; Joe Pasternak is that excited because the Henry Kosters are calling the baby Robert Joe; Townsend Netcher will continue his sun treatments on Waikiki Beach leaving shortly with the Dan Toppings; Sally Eilers and Harry Joe Brown give a cocktail party in honor of the travelers Thursday before they sail; Ann Dvorak identified some of the jewelry the phantom burglar lifted from photographs published in the Examiner; Merle Oberon dined with Robert Riskin just before she said au revoir to Hollywood. And don't forget, I told you first that she and Alex Korda will wed shortly after she reaches Europe; Jimmy Roosevelt sails on the same boat that takes Merle abroad. He will launch "Wuthering Heights" in Europe.

Gene Markey and his father dining with Melinda and Diana, Gene's two daughters, at the Brown Derby; Barbara Brewster taking time out to dine with Morgan Hill, Fifi d'Orsay's ex at the Earl Carroll Theater. Meanwhile Rudy Vallee, her constant escort up to a few days ago, was partying with Wendy Barrie; Errol Flynn, stagging it at a spot, still is keeping Warners on the anxious seat as to that "Dodge City" trip; Jean Arthur, who was expected back today, is remaining in Carmel to be with her mother who is ill; Cully Richards, once Ella Logan's heartbeat, reopening at Sloppy Maxie's. Sitting in ringside seats were Dizzy Dean and his wife, guests of Maxie.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow.

First Screen Love In Last 24 Films

His unaccustomed role in an affair of the heart is with Fay Bainter.

The last time he heard words of love from the lips of an actress was with Olivia de Havilland in a picture three years ago. Rosemary Lane gave him one quick kiss on the cheek in Jim Cagney's recent "Oklahoma Kid." But even then the words of love were daughterly

Boyd's a Cook

William Boyd, star of the Hopalong Cassidy picture, "Silver on the Sage," is an expert outdoor cook. On his California ranch, near Ventura, 35 miles from Hollywood, he has established an elaborate barbecue grill on which he prepares two-inch steaks and other ranch delicacies for his guests.

Dunne Music Graduate

Irene Dunne, who appears opposite Fred MacMurray in "Invitation to Happiness," was graduated from the Chicago College of Music before starting her theatrical career.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., March 27.—You'll be seeing him on the street in his black homburg hat, without umbrella, but he isn't Chamberlain. He's Jim Preston, superintendent of the press gallery in the Senate for 35 years.

HOPPER

Preston told me Will Rogers used to get thrown out regularly because he always caused a commotion. One day in the midst of a Dolly Gann-Alice Longworth fight for supremacy (remember?) Will sat between the ladies and caused a riot wigwagging at the press correspondents, pointing out that he was in the thick of the battle. It always made Will angry that he couldn't get everything Senator Hull said. Had to read it in the papers next morning.

Preston recalled seeing William H. Crane in "The Senator" and Will Rogers in "The Texas Steer" about 15 years ago. An 18-year-old boy discovered why Will always hesitated so long in making his radio speeches. "When he talks normally," the youngster told Preston, "every word is a cuss word. He has to pause to delete 'em in his mind." He laughed about a gridiron dinner when Will Rogers and Ed Wynn kept a group of the Nation's bigwigs open-mouthed while they argued. Both Rogers and Wynn talked at once. Will won by a gesture.

Preston is here as technical director on Frank Capra's "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," and he'll bet his last dollar that this will be an authentic portrait of what goes on in Washington today.

Have you heard about that royal vow which took place in a Paris night club, and which just may cause a permanent separation? No, that garlic diet had nothing to do with it, but a beautiful runner from Athens did.

I wonder why people take the trouble to deny that row between Hedy, Joan and Marian? It was one of the funniest things that ever happened in Hollywood, and all about a famous gentleman named Markey.

Overhead Claudette Colbert telling Clark Gable about swallowing a cap she had made to hide a crooked tooth, at a recent broadcast. Clark's managers tried to get him out before the photographers swooped. Clark said, "The ham will keep me right there posing, as long as there's a bulb left." Incidentally, if he has his suits cut any longer, they'll be smocks!

Gloria Swanson returned on the same boat from Europe as J. J. Schubert. Now they're madly discussing a new play. Wonder what's happened to that patent business of hers?

Wendy Barrie and that South American horse-racing millionaire, Lawrence Luro, have it bad, since Pat Wilder took off for New York and another look at Tommy Manville.

The "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" girl, Mary Martin, who wowed 'em in New York, may leave that big city and Winthrop Rockefeller to join Warner Brothers for a fat part in "On Your Toes."

Metro's going to town on those pictures packed with TNT. They'll produce an anti-Nazi one called, "I Had A Comrade," and Lucien Hubbard has placed Sinclair Lewis' "It Can't Happen Here," in the future after it had happened here. Slick, yes? Even Hays can't complain!

Merle Oberon, who's on her way to England says, "I'm not going to jump into matrimony. Maybe I'll feel differently about it at the end of 12 months. Mr. Korda's grand, but we'll just wait and see what a year brings forth."

That swell actor and writer, Ed Stanley, has been bending and stooping so much over his flowers, that he now has gardening of the arteries. He's just done a sketch for Jackie Searle's p. a. tour. Have you seen Jackie lately? He's parked his snarl and we've forgotten he was ever the nasty-nice kid.

Bruce Cabot is bringing Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., to Dodge City for the preview of that picture. If they can't have papa, they'll take son. But it looks like orders have gone out: No preview perfect without a Roosevelt; I don't remember—did the Hoovers get around like that?

Rides Again

JAMES CAGNEY,
now appearing in a repeat downtown engagement of "The Oklahoma Kid" on the screen at the Metropolitan Theater. Rosemary Lane plays opposite him

City to Be Moved To Another Town

The "Dodge City" street Warner Bros built on its Calabasas ranch for the Technicolor Western based on the picturesque Kansas town may become a permanent exhibit.

The studio received a request from prominent citizens of Dodge City, Kans., that the block-long street set, an accurate reproduction of Dodge City in the early 1870's, be presented to the Kansas town to become a permanent exhibit near the heart of the city, where the world premiere of "Dodge City" is to be held.

If plans of the Dodge City civic leaders materialize, the entire street set would be freighted to Kansas and rebuilt on "Boot Hill," famous cemetery in which are buried 90 men and two women who emerged second best in gun duels between the years 1872 and 1876.

Actress Sacrifices Looks for Realism

As a realist, Bette Davis has few equals among Hollywood's film players. She'll gladly sacrifice personal appearance, comfort or convenience to heighten the realism of her characterizations.

In early scenes of "Dark Victory," Miss Davis is shown in her boudoir, awakening after a night's sleep. She played those scenes without makeup and with her blonde hair tousled. Later in the picture, she's supposed to be ill and worried. The only makeup she'll wear for those scenes will be just enough to heighten her distraught appearance.

Terps Bow to Ohio State Nine, 4-3, in Debut

The Washington Post Sports

20 WASHINGTON: TUESDAY, MARCH 28, 1939 ★★★

Weidinger Forces Over Winning Run

Erratic Pitching Is Costly; Knepley Bags Two Doubles, Single To Lead Attack

By Jack Munhall.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, who played on Maryland's first nine in 1887, returned to his alma mater yesterday, but unfortunately and inadvertently set a bad and costly example. Briefly, his crime was throwing out the first "ball," because the Terp pitchers, emulating the esteemed official, perhaps threw entirely too many balls and Ohio State snapped its five-game losing streak by a 4-3 count.

Fifteen hundred fans watched the Buckeyes eke out a victory in a stirringly close and well-played game when Charley Weidinger, third Maryland pitcher, walked in the winning run in the eighth. The chunky right hander previously had placed himself in a hot spot by passing the first batter of the inning, allowing a single to the second and a walk to the fourth.

Charley Redeems Self

Charley was quick to try and redeem himself fanning, as he did, the next two batters to retire the side, but the damage had been wrought, irrevocably. For, although they did get a man to third in the ninth, the Terps didn't have the telling punch.

Ohio State reached lefty Earl Springer, Maryland's starter, and Pershing Mondorff and Weidinger for six hits, one more than the Terps weddled out of Dagenhard. It was the walks, however, that caused Maryland's downfall.

In defeat George Knepley, Maryland's brilliant all-around athlete, was the star of the game. Lanky George collected a pair of doubles and a single in four trips to the plate, and tallied two runs. Laybourne, Buckeye first baseman, led his team's attack with three singles, the last of which moved Smith in a position to score the winning marker.

Ohio State never trailed. It pushed across the first run of the game in the second on a walk to Washburn, a single by Laybourne, and an infield out by Waldo. The Buckeyes stretched their advantage to 3-0 in the fourth to the embarrassment of the fat-cheeked Mondorff.

Pershing's very appearance on the mound seemed to spur Ohio State with a "single" thought. The first four batters punched hot drives to the field and a pair of runners came clattering across. A double play, the only one of the game, saved Mondorff further trouble.

Terps Score Twice

Maryland cut its deficit to 3-2 with a sudden outburst of extra base blows in the fifth. Shorty Chumbris led off with a walk and scored on the first of Knepley's pair of two-baggers, and then Sherrod Robertson, Clark Griffith's adopted grandson, brought across Knepley with a screeching triple to deep rightfield.

Maryland's third and last run was born in the eighth off Knepley's double and successive infield outs by Robertsan and Eddie Johnson. Johnson, incidentally, and Maryland, too, was the victim of a bad break in the third when the Terps apparently were ready to force ahead. With the bases loaded and two out the youthful son of the "Big Train" slapped a hard grounder through the pitcher's mound. The ball deflected off Dagenhard's foot and into the hands of Second Baseman Myers, who stepped on the bag, forcing Knepley.

The spectacular fielding support given Dagenhard was most noticeable in the sixth when on consecutive plays two Maryland hitters were robbed of potential extra base blows. Hugh Keller was denied at least a double when Centerfielder Washburn came up with his low liner on a diving catch, and Bob Burns' bid for a Texas Leaguer was snuffed by Second Baseman Myers' over-the-shoulder grab of a twisting looper.

Angelo (Shorty) Chumbris, Maryland's bow-legged, 5-foot 2-inch second baseman, picked up from where he left off last season in the matter of getting on base without hits. He waggled walks on his first and third appearances at the plate and also received a free ticket when hit by a slow ball.

Weidinger ended the disastrous eighth with a flourish, fanning Morabito and Myers to bring his total for the inning to three. For, after yielding a walk to Smith and a cheap single to Laybourne, he had slipped a third one by the dangerous Waldo.

Intentional Foul Rule Change Is Sought by Board

Chicago, March 27 (AP).—The National Basketball Coaches Association acted today to remove the evils of intentional fouling in its only recommendation for a rule change in the present playing code.

The coaches, i the final session of their htree-day convention, suggested that the team fouled be allowed the option of a free throw or taking the ball out of bounds nearest where the foul was committed.

W. S. Chandler, of Marquette, retiring president, explained this proposal, if adopted by the rules-making body, would in effect curb intentional fouling.

Dell 'Orto Decisions Tony Dupre

Judges Unanimous Against Boxer Who Once Was D.C. Favorite

Fat, fatigued and disgusted, Tony Dupre dropped a ten-round decision to Vincent Dell' Orto last night at Turner's Arena, droping with it the last remaining shred of prestige he once enjoyed with Capital ring fans. The decision was unanimous.

An ugly rumor, traced to an innocent remark by Uupre's pilot, Al Lefebre, that Tony was ready to hang up his gloves after the fight, resulted in his being caled up on the carpet before the District Boxing Commission yesterday afternoon. The commission wasn't concerned with Dupre's retirement plans as much as it was with his willingness and anxiety to fight.

"Yes," the boy replied.

"But you're going to do your best tonight, aren't you?"

In the semifinal bout Vic iFnazzo (149¾), and Johnnie Foley (154½), fought a draw. It was a dubious decision, as Finazzo had a wide edge on The Post's scoresheet. Both boys were tired as the fight ended.

Manfredo Comes Back

Nick Manfredo (156½), knocked out Bob Robey (155), in the first round of their scheduled four-round bout. The end came after 2 minutes 15 seconds had elapsed.

Billy Selvage (126½), won a unanimous decision over Joe Sole (126½). Both boys hit the floor during their match. Joe Sole landing first in the opening round and Selvage in the second stanza.

Hampden-Sydney Wins On Murdock's Triple

Hampden-Sydney, Va., March 27 (AP).—Shortstop Buddy Murdock's triple in the eighth with the bases loaded pulled the opening game of the season out of the fire for Hampden-Sydney's baseball team today and left Colby College of Maine on the short end of a 12-to-9 score.

Yanks Stop Rookie Reisser, But Dodgers Stop Yanks

Special Dispatch to The Post.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 27.—The Yankees had to be content with a moral victory today at Waterfront Park. They stopped Patrick Harold (Pete) Reiser, the unusual 19-year-old rookie from the sandlots of St. Louis, a distinction divided between Lefty Vernon Gomez and Johnny Murphy.

But two rookie pitchers for the Brooklyn Dodgers stopped the entire Yankee ball club, with the exception of Joe Gordon and Lou Gehrig, and the Dodgers won the ball game, holding the champions to three hits. The score was 3 to 2.

The result gave the teams an even break in their series to date. The "rubber" game will be played tomorrow at Clearwater, when the Yankees engage in their last skirmish of the local area before heading into their customary long road trip leading back to New York.

40-34 Upset Marks Post Tournament

Beveragemen, Vets Of 6 Title Finals, Get Off to Poor Start; Flashes Win

The oldest organized team in the annual Washington Post-A. A. U. basketball tournament, Columbia Beverage, got off to a bad start last night in its quarter-final game with Alexandria Boys Club, valiantly tried to come back, but was beaten out, 40-34, in one of the most exciting battles to date.

Columbias defeat came as a major upset to fans of the team who have watched it reach the finals of six out of the last eight tourneys staged and win two, in 1934 and 1938. The 145-pound Columbians, however, were no match for the Fast-breaking aggregation from Alexandria, the latter running up a 15-1 lead in the first five minutes of play and holding on from there in.

Harry Phillips, demon-shooter of the Virginia five, scored a total of 19 points to pace the winning effort, while the best aggregate for Columbia was that turned in by Weigel. Alexandria was ahead, 24-14, at the half.

In the first game of the evening, the 105-pound forces of Central Branch B. C. took a 14-12 quarter-final clash from Merrick B. C. Central won the next game, too, the Americans scoring a 32-22 victory over Southeast Crows in the 120-pound division.

Northeast Flashes won their way into the 135-pound semifinals with a narrow 20-18 margin over Merrick.

Central Senators In 105-Pound Finals

Central Boys Club Senators advanced to the 1055-pound class finals with a 14-12 victory over Merrick Boys Club. MacDonald Payne and John Walsh led the second half attack of the winners, after Merrick held the score to 6-6 at halftime. Five players figured in the 12-point attack of the losers.

Central Boys Club Defeats S. E. Crows

Central Boys Club advanced another team to the semifinals when the Americans defeated Southeast Boys Club Crows, 32-22, in a 120-pound class quarter-final clash.

The eventual winners led 10-7 at halftime, and David Brown and Joe Mencarini hit a hot scoring pace in the final periods to widen the margin. Brown accounted for 13 points. The losers highpoint sensation of the early rounds, forward Zell, had three fouls early and played less than half the game, scoring eight points.

N.E.B.C. Takes Close 135-Pounder, 20-18

With a narrow 20-18 triumph over their boys club rival, Merrick, the Northeast Flashes advanced to the semifinals. It was a tight, bitterly-contested game that either might have won until the final whistle blew.

The Flashes held a 12-19 lead at half time, but several times between then and the end the score shifted hands. Then, with about 4 minutes remaining, Northeast brought its total to 20 against 16 for the opposition, and the lead was enough for a victory. St. Mary's Quintet In Forfeited Game

The D. C. A. A. U. has ordered Al's Billiard Parlor and St. Mary's Boys Club of Alexandria to play a 145-pound game tonight at 6 p. m. in the Central Boys Club gymnasium, Third and B streets northwest.

St. Mary's lost to Regan Neon but when the latter team showed up for the Al's Billiard Parlor game, it was discovered they used an ineligible player, and the game was not played. As t. Mary's lost to a team using an ineligible player, they will get another chance.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Tampa, Fla., March 27.—With the Boston Red Sox, Monte Weaver ought to be a happier fellow. He's joining the Red Sox, you know. Clark Griffith sold him this morning. Monte didn't bring much. About $5,000, which is somewhat under the waiver price of $7,500. But Monte is still in the big leagues. And what he should be particularly delighted about he's away from the Washington club.

POVICH

Clark Griffith encountered no objections from Manager Bucky Harris in his decision to sell Weaver. Harris was never very keen about Weaver being on his pitching staff. Harris' reasons were not at all mysterious. He simply didn't like the way Weaver pitched a baseball. He started Weaver in ball games only when it was an absolute necessity.

What Harris didn't like about Weaver, particularly, was Monte's inability to conceal his pitches. He couldn't understand how a fellow who has been around as long as Monte could not learn to hide his grip on the ball. He spent long hours with the fellow attempting to teach him the tricks of not exposing his curve-ball and fast-ball grips to the batter. And long ago, Harris gave up hope.

The payoff came one day last season. The Chicago White Sox took toe holds and slammed everything Weaver threw at them. They knew when he was throwing his curve, and they knew when he was chucking his fast ball, and they simply laid in wait. Before the second inning was over, Harris took Weaver out.

Manager Harris Finally Gave Up

"That's the finish," said Bucky. "Now the White Sox have caught on to him. That makes five clubs in this league which know what Monte is going to throw. The only teams I can afford to start him against now are the Browns and the Red Sox. Somehow, they never have tried to steal his stuff, for some reason. Those clubs might keep him in the league."

It's significant that the team which bought Weaver from the Nats is one of those clubs that Harris named as not being aware of his pitching flaw. And lucky it is for Monte that the Red Sox are managed by Joe Cronin. Because Cronin will always remember Weaver for his pitching with the Nats of 1932 and the pennant-winning Nats of 1933. In those two years Weaver was considerable pitcher.

Monte, when he came into the big leagues, resembled nobody more than he did Ichabod Crane in a baseball suit. Tall, spare, loose-jointed and with a turkey-neck, he was something of a ringer for Washington Irving's legendary character, while he was winning 21 games and losing only 11 for Baltimore in 1931. Clark Griffith scouted him personally and liked the big-league prospects of the fellow.

Griff Liked Him $30,000 Worth

He liked Weaver so much, in fact, that he peeled off $30,000 from the Washington Club's bankroll and handed it over to the late Jack Dunn for Weaver's contract. That sum still stands as the biggest price Griffith ever paid for any kind of a pitcher.

Griffith got his $30,000 worth out of We aver. The first thing Monte did when he joined the Nats late in 1931 was to beat the White Sox with four hits. In 1932, he broke all records for rookie pitchers in the big leagues, winning 22 games and losing only 10. And in 1933, his ten wins and five defeats were a potent factor in winning the pennant for the Nats. Monte was showing folks a superb fast ball, a nice curve and, above all, control, and in the World Series of '33, it was Weaver who turned in the Nats' best pitching performance, the 10-inning, 2-1 game against the Giants which he didn't win because of his own laxity in fielding a bunt.

He didn't go well in 1934, losing 15 and winning only 11. He seemed to have lost his fast ball. And he appeared underweight. At one point Trainer Mike Martin caught him on a vegetable diet and squawked loudly, telling Weaver that ball players needed red meat if they were to retain their strength. Monte, it seems, had been converted to vegetarianism by a glib-tongued Biloxi, Miss., fanatic on the subject.

Promised to Give Up Vegetables

Weaver promised to give up his vegetarianism, but he continued to complain that he didn't feel well. Reports around the Washington clubhouse were that he was visiting some kind of a quack who was soaking him a handsome penny for his services. The quack claimed to have discovered something awry in Weaver's back and showed him X-ray pictures to prove it, but the story is that the X-rays were pictures of backs other than Weaver's.

At one point in 1935 the Nats sent him back to the minors when he failed to win consistently, but Griffith was in no mood to give up on $30,000 so easily, and the next year he brought him back. Manager Bucky Harris then claimed he knew the reason for Monte's failure—his habit of tipping the batters off on what he would pitch.

Harris is the sort of a fellow who sets great store by such sort of stuff, and he worked patiently with Weaver, sometimes in high disgust at him. He couldn't understand how a chap of Weaver's intelligence—the fellow had held an instructorship at the University of Virginia—could fail to grasp the fine points of pitching. Said Harris at one point:

"Sometimes I think it's easier to teach a dumb cluck things about baseball than to a fellow with intelligence. They're apt to have too much imagination. Hurts sometimes. Take Weaver's case. He gets a common tummy ache and begins to think there is something awfully wrong with him. Give me guys with a strong back and a weak mind . . . sometimes."

On the Line With Considine

New York, March 27.—What are you interested in?

BOXING? Tony Canzoneri is fighting again tomorrow night. Fellow named Eddie Brink, from Scranton. Canzoneri beat him March 7 at the New York Coliseum, with 13,000 in the house, but like a vaccination without serum it didn't take. So they're going at it again at the Hippo. It will be Tony's twelfth fight since shocking all his friends (but not his own pocketbook) by beginning a comeback. He has womn 11 of them, blowing the other duke to Eddie Zivic.

CONSIDINE

Canzoneri hasn't looked too good and he hasn't looked too bad, during the comeback. He's not quite certain of himself yet, so far as meeting Armstrong is concerned. He wants to sharpen up a little more on the brinks. He's got Frankie Wallace, Jimmy Vaughn, Jimmy Tygh and a couple other third-flight men on the list, to come. Then he meets tough, savage little Al Davis at the Garden in May. And if he gets by that one he'll. trust himself in there with the champion. So will Mike Jacobs trust him in there—which is the important thing.

Fourteen years have passed since Canzoneri made his professional pugilistic debut. That was on July 25, 1925, in New York, and he knocked out one Jackie Gardner with a single punch. He came to New York recommended by a blind man, New Orleans' Pete Herman. Fourteen years is a double lifetime in fighting. If you don't think so, take a look at the champs of 1925:

HEAVYWEIGHT—Jack Dempsey, now in the restaurant, hotel, whisky and clothing businesses. Light heavy—Paul Berlenbach, now a bartender in an Astoria, Long Island, saloon. Middleweight—Harry Greb, dead. Welterweight—Mickey Walker, a song and dance man in roadhouses. Presently at leisure. Lightweight—Jimmy Goodrich, now a Buffalo referee. Featherweight—Kid Kaplan, now a Hartford, Conn., insurance man. Bantamweight—Charley Phil Rosenberg, now a New York bookmaker. Flyweight—Pancho Villa, dead.

BASEBALL? The operations of at least two of the pitchers who exposed their arms to surgeons' knives last fall seem to have been successful. Carl Hubbell pitched excellently Sunday afternoon to shut out the Indians for three innings and beat Bobby Feller to boot. Wes Ferrell has looked even better in training camp. Particularly in Hubbell's case must this be a fearful relief to the owners. Hub means the difference of hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Giants' income. And as for Ferrell, we have a hunch that he is going to be the pitcher who comes through for McCarthy this year—when Ruffing goes into his inevitable decline.

GOLF? Recent happenings in the golf world bear out our belief that the U. S. G. A. should revise the standard par figures in all events which attract professionals—because they break par so horrifically that they are giving duffers and good club players inferiority complexes. Sam Snead and Ralph Guldahl were seven under par for the tough Miami-Biltmore course in the International 4-Ball Event. Their best ball for the first nine was 28. Guldahl himself had a 30 for the nine.

Those fellows just don't play the same game we do.

Nats' Mound Staff Set With Six Veterans, Five Rookies

Weaver Sale To Red Sox Decides It

Harris Is Satisfied To String Along With Young Talent; Game Halted by Rain

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Tampa, Fla., March 27.—The pitching picture of the Nats for 1939 was more clearly defined today following the sale of Monte Weaver to the Boston Red Sox.

With Manager Bucky Harris having announced that he plans to carry 11 hurlers this season, a staff of six veterans and five rookies will carry the burden for the Washington club. Harris is ready to launch the season with the following pitching cast:

Veterans—Harry Kelley, Pete Appleton, Jimmy DeShong, Dutch Leonard, Ken Chase and Joe Krakauskas.

Rookies—Joe Haynes, Walter Masterson, Alex Alexandra, Roberto Ortiz and Arnold Anderson.

The sale of Weaver virtually put an end to the rookies' battle for pitching jobs. Eight young pitchers have already been released, and the superiority of the five rookies mentioned above is clear-cut. The only rookie hurler still with the club who has a chance to break into the pitching brigade is Bucky Jacobs, right-handed star of the 1938 Charlotte club.

When Griffith sold Weaver to the Red Sox this morning for a price below the waiver price of $7,500, he was suiting his action to his words. His oft-repeated declaration had been that the Washington club was committed to a program that would bring its young pitchers into play.

"We aren't going anywhere with our 1938 pitching staff," said Griffith today. "Fellows like Weaver wouldn't take us anywhere. The rookies are going to get the chance to show what they can do."

Manager Harris voiced no objections to the sale of Weaver. He concurred with Griffith in the plan to pin their hopes on young talent.

"I don't know how far away our young pitchers may be," said Harris, "but they have shown us enough to warrant keeping them. We still have six veterans. That's enough for any staff".

Two of those veterans—Pete Appleton and Jimmy Deshong—will get a chance to display their 1939 form tomorrow when the Nats move to nearby St. Petersburg for a battle with the remnants of the St. Louis Cardinals' Gas House gang. Rain halted today's game.

Notes of the Nats—The Nats made a futile trip to Haines City today in an attempt to play an exhibition game with the Kansas City Blues . . . Rain forced the cancellation of the game and the Washington Club continued to to Tampa . . . Walter Johnson, who is making all the trips with the Nats, is besieged by autograph hunters and handshakers at every stop, and introduced during the games . . . At Tampa, Johnson is back on the scene of the accident that cut his pitching career . . . It was here in 1927 that Joe Judge hit the line drive that broke Johnson's leg . . . Bucky Harris declares that Walter Masterson and Roberto Ortiz were not exactly unimpressive despite their defeat by the Tigers yesterday . . . When you consider they were two green kids out there pitching against Tommy Bridges and Vernon Kennedy, they did not do badly, said Harris . . . What bothered Harris more than the loss of the ball game was the utter inability of Jimmy Wasdell and Bobby Estalella to hit curveball pitching . . . The Nats' headquarters in Tampa is the scene of the famous fight in which Dizzy Dean, with the help of a dozen members of the Gas House Gang, beat up two baseball writers in 1937.

Schiff, Bellak 'Marked Men' In Table Tennis

American-Hungarian Match Set Friday At Heurich's Gym

Sol Schiff and Lazlo Bellak will be the men to watch in the American-Hungarian international table tennis match at Heurich's gym Friday night although neither advanced as far as the recent national tournament as Bellak's teammate, Tabor Hazi.

Nevertheless, between them Schiff and Bellak probably have won as many championships as any two players in the world and both have been members of their country's Swaythling Cup teams ever since Hungary and America started to compete in table tennis' Davis Cup competition.

Bellak played for Hungary in the first Swaythling Cup matches in 1928 and has helped the mid-European country win seven of tis nine world championships since that time. Schiff was a member of America's first team in 1935 and was instrumental in making the United States the world's No. 1 team in 1937.

Bellak was the U. S. champion both in 1937 and '38, runner-up to the world's champion in 1929 and '33 and world consolation champion in 1938. He also shared the U. S. men's doubles championship last year and was the world's mixed doubles champion with Wendy Woodhead, of England, two years ago.

Both Bellak and Schiff will take part in two singles matches apiece Friday night and then paid against each other in doubles.

SID KARP

With 82 points to his credit in three games, Sid Karp, J. C. C. center ranks high among the unlimited tourney players

Jewish Community Center stacks its championship hopes against the Delaware & Hudson tonight in the second unlimited class semifinal of the Post-A. A. U. basketball tournament, nearing a close at the Eastern High gymnasium. Coached by Everett Russell, former Tech high and independent star, J. C. C. has provided some of the best basketball of the tournament and will be heavily backed tonight, to gain the finals against D. & H. Both clubs have had a rough trip to escape elimination and it goes without saying that basketball of the "do or die" variety will be shown before either bows out of the competition to pave the way for the unlimited finals tomorrow night.

As if this clash wasn't enough to stir the soul of any basketball fan, four other battles are on the program, including a semifinal in the girls' class. Sherwood's formidable lassies will tackle Hyattsville's equally formidable girls in a battle that will provide the opponent for the sensational Rockville sextet in the final scheduled for Friday night. Semifinal games in the 105-pound and 90-pound classes, as well as a quarterfinal in the 145-pound class between the Merrick and Powell Boys clubs will make tonight a standout.

Karps Is J. C. C. Hope

J. C. C. depends upon a speedy attack with Sid Karp on the scoring end. If Delaware and Hudson can stop Karp, it will move into the finals. If Delaware and Hudson fails to stop Karp, it will go down. The J. C. C. star has scored 82 points in three games, a mark believed to top all individual efforts in the unlimited class in tourney history here, and is the leading candidate for the Jim Sprigman medal to be awarded the champion scorer in the unlimited division.

Karp, former all-New Jersey State scholastic player and George Washington University freshman, seems to have every shot in the basketball book. He has an uncanny eye for "pots" and has proven that he also can "drift" through the defense to get the close ones. Despite the efforts of his teammates to "feed" him, Karp, in other games, has deliberately passed to avoid "hogging" the scoring. However, Coach Russell has convinced the players that Karp is their hope tonight and he will be instructed to shoot it every opportunity.

D. and H. is not unmindful of Karp's ability and probably will assign Tommy Folliard, one of the best guards in the tournament, to the J. C. C. star. Folliard is a veteran with plenty of speed and all the court tricks up his sleeve. He is a scoring threat himself and many believe that he can hold Karp and at the same time get plenty of points. This remains to be seen.

In addition to Karp, J. C. C. has a good scorer in Felix Silverstein, former Central star. Silverstein collected 14 points against Bolling Field and is superior to Karp as a floor player. Al Scheinerman, Scotty Feldman, Werksman, Genderson and Jacobson are good players who will be ready to "give all" for old J. C. C.

Folliard May Guard

J. C. C. gained the semifinals by eliminating the two Y. M. C. A. teams, the "Blues" and "Reds," and then downed Bolling Field, 56-41 last Saturday. Delaware and Hudson breezed in ahead of Georgetown Boys Club in the first round but was hard pressed to defeat Merrick Boys Club, 42-34 and Stouffer's, with its American U. stars, 42-33.

D. and H. has a scorer who may match anything Karp can offer. He is Gerald Burns who put up a whale of a performance in the previous game. Against Stouffer's he contributed eight field goals and a foul for 17 points in addition to giving a brilliant ball-following exhibition. Fones, Viana, Smith, Genderson, Walker and Sullivan are other D. and H. dependables.

The girls' game brings together teams that won with comparitive ease in previous games. Hyattsville trounced the United Typewriters while Sherwood swamped Federal Trade Commission. With the chance at the title, The Post Trophy, the A. A. U. medals and Rockville's winning streak at stake, there should be plenty of excitement. The girls' finals will be played Friday night.

Presidents In Track Meet At Richmond

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Alexandria, March 27.—George Washington High School trackmen inaugurate their 1939 season at Richmond, Saturday, April 8, in the second annual Central District meet of the Virginia Class A Conference on the University of Richmond athletic field. Six district teams will be represented, including Thomas Jefferson and John Marshall, both of Richmond; Washington and Lee, of Ballston, and Hopewell, Petersburg and G. W. Washington and Lee is the defending champion.

The meet will mark the coaching debut of Willis Benner, former University of Maryland athlete, who was recently appointed to tutor the G. W. squad.

Approximately 60 candidates are seeking berths on the varsity squad, but prospects are none too bright with only six lettermen having returned from the fairly strong 1938 team.

In addition to the Central District engagement, the Presidents will enter the State Class A Meet, at Charlottesville, and the Central High School "C" Club classic, while about four dual meets will complete the card.

Four crack teams will begin play in the first annual Senior League basketball tournament at the Armory Hall tomorrow night, when semifinals will be staged in the form of a double-header at 8 o'clock. Pairings for the first round will be made tomorrow afternoon.

Participants include the Fort Hunt CCC, Columbia Firemen, Alexandria Boys Club and the Kendrick Flashes, leaders in the 12-team senior loop.

The title will be decided Saturday when opening-round survivors meet at the Armory. The two teams eliminated in the semifinals will meet for consolation honors.

Three trophies will be awarded. The presentations will be made at the annual banquet, to be held Tuesday evening, April 4, at Gadsby's Tavern.

Episcopal High School baseball, track and tennis teams will resume preparations for the coming campaign a week from today. Extensive schedules have been carded for all three teams, and interscholastic competition will get under way within a week after their return to school.

The Maroons' baseball team will be the first to swing into action, engaging Georgetown Prep at Episcopal on Monday, April 3, while the track and tennis teams will open their season the following week-end.

Polo Player Honored

Auburn, Ala., March 27.—Recognized last season as a capable leader and a daring and able all-around rider, Bob McNulty, senior from Medford, Mass., has been elected Auburn's polo captain for the second successive year. The lanky McNulty, a fine performer in the No. 3 position, was chosen the Tigers' 1939 polo leader by the returning lettermen.

D. C. Pros Drop Small Sectional Play

Profitless Expeditions To Baltimore and Virginia Called Off

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

In a quiet, brief meeting yesterday at Kenwood Country Club, the District professional members of the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. decided to confine their sectional tournament activities to local clubs, and dispense with the profitless trips to Baltimore and Virginia throughout the season.

When the Middle Atlantic pros meet next Monday at Indian Spring the District contingent will inform President Ralph Beach that they will compete only in the sectional championship, qualifying rounds for the National event, and possibly a team match or exhibition.

For years the members of the Mid-Atlantic body have prepared an elaborate schedule, with weekly events here, in Baltimore and with occasional trips to Virginia. As a rule, the tourneys have not been successful, seldom did the winnings pay the expenses of the visiting pros, and the entire arrangement was unsatisfactory.

To Have Own Schedule

So the District pros will draw up a schedule of their own in a few weeks, play biweekly affairs and be under no obligation for trips to Baltimore or other out of town clubs.

What action the Middle Atlantic body will take will not be known until next week's get-together. The Baltimore pros may decide to play pro-amateurs, etc., on the same basis, and again they may favor a split in the organization, that has been talked of, but averted, for some time.

But regardless, the local situation will be a better one, the tournaments will be open to any pro outside the city, and the Baltimore members may continue to visit if they wish. Gene Larkin, Woodmont mentor, head of the local pros, will convey the word to Beach.

Houghton, Brownell Win

In a combined professional and amateur sweepstakes preceding the meeting, Al Houghton, former Old Point Comfort mentor, and Bobby Brownell, the District's leading amateur last year, tied with par 70s. Brownell, a member of the Duke golf team, is spending a week at home during spring vacation.

Four other amateurs played in the field of 13 but the pros wisely decided that Brownell should play from scratch while the others received handicaps.

The winners were each out in 36 and back in 34 for the tying 70s. Houghton started with a 40-foot putt for a birdie on the first hole and also dropped a 15-footer on the fifteenth for a birdie, while Brownell dropped four birdie putts in his round.

Lewis Worsham, Chevy Chase, put in one under par 34 and back in 37, missed a tie by a single shot, while Al Jamison, Indian Spring; Mel Shorey, East Potomac, and George Diffenbaugh, Kenwood, were next with 73s. Jamison was out in sub-par 34, but took 7 on the eleventh and finished with 39.

Other pro scores were Al Treder, Manor, 77; Gene Larkin, Woodmont, 77, and Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam, 80. Charles Malone, Indian Spring, led the amateurs with 75-3, 72, with Maury Fitzgerald, Kenwood, 77-5, 72; Eddie Bean, Beaver Dam, 77-2, 75, and Volney Burnett, 77-2, 75.

Worsham is back at Chevy Chase, after a winter with Bob Barnett at Indian Creek, Miami, Fla.

Va. Game Heads To Confer April 7

Richmond, Va., March 27 (AP).—Chairman Carl H. Nolting announced today the State Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries would meet here April 7 to consider regulations concerning the hunting season opening next fall.

Nolting said any persons who had suggestions to offer regarding the regulations were invited to present them at that time.

The commission also announced today adoption of a regulation permitting the gigging of carp in the Shenandoah River in Shenandoah, Clarke and Rockingham counties during daylight hours in the month of May.

The gigging must be from the banks of the river and the bag limit was set at 10 carp a day.

Delaware Defeats Bridgewater Nine

Bridgewater, Va., March 27 (AP).—Timely hitting and several stolen bases gave the University of Delaware baseball team a 3 to 1 victory over the Bridgewater College Eagles here today.

Herb Ruby and Wally Simpson shared mound duty for Bridgewater and limited Delaware to five safeties. The Eagles touched Reed for seven blows but couldn't hit in the pinches. The Eagles' run came when Ray Reed scored on Sipe's double in the fifth inning.

Down In Front

With Richards Vidmer

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 27.—Perhaps the reason I never before have taken any interest in all this excitement about deep-sea fishing has been due to the fact that all fishermen seem to think they have to get up and start out at some perverted hour like 6:30 in the morning, or may be 5.

VIDMER

Anyway, it wasn't until Billy DeBeck and Blaine Asher and Fred Lassfell assured me that we wouldn't have to go util 9:30 that I could see any sense in the proposed trip.

"Oh, come on," Billy urged when I first demurred. "We'll go out for kingfish. We'll leave here about 9:30 in the morning and come in for dinner with 1,000 pounds or so."

It wasn't the prospect of a fish dinner that lured me, but the hour he suggested, and I must admit that I was mildly curious to see what it is that makes Don Stillman and Bill Haskell and those piscatorial experts so enthusiastic about their sport. They laugh at me for playing golf, and I laugh back, but at least I was willing to give their hobby a fair trial—provided, of course, I didn't have to get up at the crack of dawn.

It seems that Vernon Combs had put his 40-foot craft at our disposal for the day, and, loaded with a gallon of bait, five fried chieckens, a case of coca-cola, fishing rods and reels and a deck of cards, we set forth to bring in a boatload of kingfish.

"Some people go out for sailfish," Blaine Asher explained, "and others for tarpon or barracuda, but I think we ought to go after kingfish today. They give you a good fight and furnish plenty of sport."

The Boat Ride Is Fine

But first there was quite a boat-ride. It seemed we had to get out into the Gulf of Mexico before we could figure on getting any kingfish and we put in a couple of hours in idle conversation while we Plowed through the waters of the bay, the white foam running back fro mthe bow in silver ribbons. A bright sun was beating down and the skies formed a canopy of unbroken lines, and I realized that not the least enjoyable part of the day was likhely to be the boat ride itself.

We passed quarantine and paused to ask the dozen of fishermen sitting on the wharf if they were getting anything, but they answered only with grunts, which I discovered before the day was over is the universal language of

Colonial Frosh To Play Hoyas And Maryland

Six D. C. High School Nines on Schedule; Morris at the Helm

Two games each with the Georgetown and Maryland freshmen top the 18-game schedule announced yesterday for George Washington University's freshman baseball team. The Colonial cubs also will play six of the local high school nines, and the Washington-Lee and Falls Church clubs from nearby Virginia.

George Washington is re-establishing baseball after a year's lapse. Since the sport will be placed on a major basis again next year, with a varsity, Coach Ed Morris is spending considerable time with the current frosh.

As a nucleus, he has five local high-school stars who have been pacing the squad in practice the past three weeks. Wes Taylor, catcher, and Lee Lusby, infielder, from Eastern High; George Oertel, outfielder, and Toby Bright, southpaw pitcher, from Western; Jack Redinger, right-handed Roosevelt pitcher, and Tommy Simpson, Washington-Lee infielder, are the players Morris is counting on.

The schedule—April 15, Heurich Brewers; 18, Roosevelt High; 19, Western High (practice game); 21, Western High (practice game); 22, Bureau of Investigation; 24, 7-Up Club; 25, Heurich Brewers; 27, Eastern High.

May 1, Falls Church High; 3, Maryland Frosh; 4, Washington-Lee High; 5, Anacostia High; 8, Georgetown Frosh; 10, 7-Up Club; 11, Tech High; 16, Maryland Frosh; 18, Central High; 20, Bureau of Investigation; 22, Georgetown Frosh.

B.-C.C. Makes First Baseball Start

Georgetown Prep baseball team, which started its season last Friday with a shellacking at the hands of Richard Montgomery High, undertakes its second opponent today on the Garrett Park diamond, Bethesda-Chevy Chase. Starting time is 3:30.

It is the first scheduled game for Bethesda, a team which promises to furnish schoolboy nines some of their heaviest worries. Though beaten in its opener, Prep has several brilliant prospects, and hopes for at least a 50-50 season. Following is the remainder of Prep's 1939 card;

Nat Camp Happy; Learns Travis Is Not Seriously Ill

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Orlando, Fla., March 27.—Tension was eased in the Washington training camp today when it was announced that Shortstop Cecil Travis, under examination in Orange Memorial Hospital, was suffering only from a slight bronchial ailment.

Travis had been removed to the local hospital when he registered a high fever following a siege of influenza. Washington club officials had feared that his ailment was of a more serious nature.

Travis will remain at the hospital for two or three more days. Doctors have announced his condition as not serious.

Squash Tourney Starts on Monday

The annual D. C. squash recquets championship will be held at the University Club next Monday through Saturday, Philip F. Herrick, chairman of the tournament committee, announced yesterday.

According to Herrick, an entry exceeding the 42 who put their names on the line last year is expected for the 1939 title affair. Lieut. W. Howard will defend his 1938 championship, and other stellar racqueteers in the field will probably be Gil Hunt, arshall Exnicios, Allen innix, Enugene Brownell, Hugh Lynch and John Pratt.

Entries, which may be field with Ralph Foster, chairman of the D. C. A. A. U. squash racquet committee, close Saturday, April 1. Gold, silver and bronze medals will be given the finishers by the A. A. U., and the University Club will award cups to the winner and runner-up.

Blessed Sacrament Wins

Blessed Sacrament School was credited with the parochial school basketball championship of Washington yesterday when it won a close, 21-19 victory over St. Stephens in the St. John's gym.

Don't Look Now, But They're Still Playing Football

It may be spring in Washington, but it's football time in Detroit. At least Redskins officials feel that way about it.

General Manager Jack Espey yesterday received a request from Andy Farkas, flashy sophomore halfback of the '38 eleven, for permission to appear in an all-star game in Detroit. The battle will be between the University of Detroit's 1939 eleven and a team of alumni. Proceeds are placed in a fund for the benefit of needy students.

Although there is a league rule against players participating in such games, Espey wired President Joe Carr for the necessary permission, and Farkas will play.

Little Donna Leona Drives to Victory in Tropical Purse

Whips Five Sprinters to Pay $15.90

Tiny Filly Beats Off Late Challenge Down Stretch; William Palmer Takes Place

By the Associated Press.

Tropical Park, Fla., March 27. Donna Leona, reputedly the smallest racehorse in training, once again showed that there is nothing small about her heart when she raced to a driving one-length victory in the 6-furlong Ocala Purse here this afternoon. The tiny 4-year-old daughter of Don Leon-Myrtle Belle, flaunting the silks of the Snow White stable, defeated five other sprinters and finished in 1:11 4-5 to return $15.90 for two.

William Palmer, from the Medway stable, beat J. B. Partridge's heavily backed Suntime for the place, a half length separating the pair.

Donna Leona finished third to Early Delivery and Our Ketcham in Saturday's Royal Palm Handicap. She has not been out of the money in nine Florida starts this winter and has won five of her eight 1939 races. The undersized but well proportioned chestnut filly is a prime sentimental favorite in this sector.

Unless Donna Leona can steal out of the pack, it is difficult to pick her out of a field in action. She is dwarfed by normal sized thoroughbreds. But Donna quickly stepped away from her rivals today and opened up a daylight advantage under Apprentice Eddie Robart. Her lead diminished in the stretch when the slow starting William Palmer made a game rally, but the filly had enough left to hold her pursuer at bay. Suntime, outrun early, made up ground to be an easy third. Jimmy Ashcroft, pacesetting rider at the meeting, who loses his five pounds apprentice allowance tomorrow, rode the gelding hard in an effort to score a double, but to no avail.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—EPITAPH, $3.50, $2.80, $2.70; WORTHING, $5.80, $3.80; WOWO, $6.40.

EPITAPH, quickest to begin, held the field safe for speed and, cleverly rated in front, maintained his position courageously under light pressure through the stretch. WORTHING, prominent contender all the way, responded with good courage when placed to a drive, but was not equal to the winner. WOWO gradually bettered her position while slipping through on the inside and wore TIME INTERVAL down in the final drive. TIME INTERVAL went forwardly on the inside the opening half mile. He came to the outside entering the stretch and faltered in the stretch run. OPENING NIGHT could not get up. EMPTY BOTTLE stopped badly after going a half mile.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—COLORED POST, $6.00, $4.20, $3.10; MARLIANT, $16.10, $7.60; BALTEE, $3.70.

COLORED POST began fast, drew clear in the opening furlong, saved ground and was never seriously menaced thereafter. MARLIANT, well up on the outside, closed gamely through the stretch and wore down BALTEE in the final drive. BALTEE, nearest in pursuit of the leader early, faltered in the stretch run. JABIRU, forced to go wide all the way, finished stoutly. BOY BABY, jammed about at the start, closed a big gap. The last three horses at the start had no chance after the break.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:36. Off at 3:41. Winner, Medway Stable's b. f. (3), by Westwick—Light Luggage. Two-dollar mutuels paid—WEEBAG, $9.80, $5.60, $4.20; NINE-O-TWO, $13.60, $7.50; WORPOISE, $5.20.

WEEBAG went into contention rapidly in the opening quarter mile, drew out entering the stretch, but then faltered and just lasted long enough to withstand NINE-O-TWO's challenge. NINE-O-TWO, vigorously ridden, went prominently on the inside for the entire trip, responding to punishment, closed gamely and was wearing down the winner. WORPOISE gained steadily on the outside after leaving the back stretch, finished with good courage to punishment in the last furlong and was going fastest of all at the end. BRIGHT SPOT broke in a tangle. She worked her way up on the inside in the first half mile, came wide into the stretch, but never seriously threatened the leaders. CITY JUDGE raced evenly.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; allowances. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:06. Off at 4:09½. Winner, Snow White Stable's ch. f. Two-dollar mutuels paid—DONNA LEONA, $15.90, $6.60, $3.60; WILLIAM PALMER, $7.20, $4.10; SUNTIME, $2.90.

DONNA LEONA went to the front with a rush, set a swift pace and raced GAY BALKO and PATSEY BEGONE into defeat in the early running. She opened up a winning lead entering the stretch, but then faltered and was under extreme pressure to maintain her lead. WILLIAM PALMER broke a trifle slowly. He saved much ground coming into the stretch, closed gamely and outlasted SUNTIME in the final drive. SUNTIME moved up with a rush while saving ground rounding the turn and swung around the leaders at the furlong pole, but hung slightly when the final test came. PATSEY BEGONE had no excuses. GAY BALKO quit.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 4:40. Off at 4:45. Winner, Ector Stable's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—ELI YALE, $35.90, $17.70, $11.60; MUGGINS, $12.10, $5.60; SHE KNOWS, $4.50.

ELI YALE, prominent contender and saving the most ground, took command with a rush when placed to pressure entering the stretch to win with something to spare. MUGGINS, displaying startling improvement and keen speed, raced CAUTIVO into submission in the early stages, drew out into a good lead on the stretch turn, but ran out and lost considerable ground, but came again and outlasted SHE KNOWS. The latter lacked early foot, but gained steadily in the final furlong.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won handily; place driving. Went to post at 5:11. Off at 5:12½. Winner, Mrs. G. R. Two-dollar mutuels paid—NESSUS, $9.40, $4.20, $2.80; LADFIELD, $3.90, $2.60; BONNY CLABBER, $2.70.

NESSUS followed the pace under steadying restraint until well around the far turn. He assumed command at his leisure and won lightly urged. LADFIELD, displaying good speed, set a steady early pace while saving ground. He responded to punishment in the last furlong and was gaining slowly at the finish. BONNY CLABBER, a forward contender all the way, closed stoutly. BEAVER COUNTY suffered no mishaps.

EIGHTH RACE—One and three-sixteenths miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 5:39. Off at 5:39. Two-dollar mutuels paid—COUNTRY LASS, $12.60, $5.90; $3.90; STALAGMITE, $3.70, $3.00; BOB C., $7.30.

COUNTRY LASS gradually improved her position along the rail after entering the backstretch, shook off the leaders and won going away. STALAGMITE, displaying the most speed, drew clear in the opening quarter mile, held on tenaciously when placed to a drive and outlasted BOB C. The latter, on the outside and well up under light restraint, moved up menacingly entering the stretch, but then hung when the real test came. NIPPONESE, prominent contender all the way, faltered in the last furlong. MINEBOY was outrun early and only passed tired horses at the end.

Top Weight In Bowie Test To Airflame

Vanderbilt Star Given 122 Pounds for Rowe Handicap Thursday

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's Airflame, speedy son of Ariel, has been assigned topweight of 122 pounds for the Rowe Memorial Handicap, $5,000 added feature of the opening card at Bowie on Thursday. Racing Secretary J. B. Campbell gave Airflame 2 pounds more than the 120-pound impost for Felix Spatolo's veteran, Wise Prince. Whitey Abel's Honey Cloud and the Millsdale Stable's Rye Beach will get in the 6-furlong test with 117 pounds.

The doubtful honor of carrying the most poundage goes to Airflame justly. He shipped from California in top shape. Although the 4-year-old failed to win on the West Coast this winter, he turned in a fine performance in the $10,000 added San Felipe Handicap, finishing third in a blanket finish that found him a nose and a head from the winning Specify. In a previous start he was headed out of a purse by Speed to Spare, his one-time stablemate.

Won $15,575 Last Year

Last year Airflame started seven times and won four to hang up $15,575 in earnings. The San Felipe Handicap was run in 1.10 1-5, a speedy affair even over the fast Santa Anita track.

Wise Prince was second several times during his Florida stay but it was not until his last appearance that he could reach the winner's circle. Honey Cloud missed starting in the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap when he went lame but is reported back in shape. Honey Cloud came off Alan Clarke's Huntington Farm last fall and became the stake sensation of the Maryland season. He is unbeaten over the Bowie track, having won his maiden race there. His last appearance was a dead heat with Clodion.

Old Rosebush, owned by Mrs. Anthony Pelleteri, was assigned 116 pounds. He has shown much speed and will go coupled with Rye Beach as an entry. Both are trained by Tony Pelleteri. J. Yancey Christmas' Rough Time, stake winner and notable sprinter, will carry 116 pounds if he goes. A. C. Compton's Sun Egret gets 115 pounds to 114 for Wintson Guest's Drudgery.

Lady Maryland at 108

Among those who get in at 108 pounds are Gustave Ring's Lady Maryland, Mrs. E. G. Lewis' Paglicci, T. J. Hill's White Cockade, Bomar Stable's Benjamin, W. L. Brann's Athelwold and William Ziegler's Our Mat. The three featherweights of the 18 eligibles are E. K. Bryson's Bunny Baby, 100; Mrs. J. A. Nix's Woodsaw, 100, and Sandon Farm's Morstep, 95.

Honey Cloud almost missed a chance at the $5,000. In telegraphing his entry for the Bowie stakes, the Rowe Memorial was omitted by mistake. Trainer Whitey Abel had the correction made, however.

D. C. Business For Quarter Ahead of 1938

Bank Clearings for Two Months Show $1,491,043 Gain

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Washington business activity is expected to exceed that of the first quarter of 1938, the forecast being based on January to mid-March reports. Bank clearings in the first two months of the current year aggregated $179,158,407.43, an advance of $1,491,043.50 over the corresponding period last year, and reports from the Washington Clearing House Association indicate this gain will be continued through March.

Big Mortgage Loan Rise

Local home mortgages accepted for insurance by the Federal Housing Administration in January were three times greater than those of the comparative month a year ago. In the first month of the present year, number of local insurance mortgages arose to 23, amounting to $159,600, compared with but 8 in January, 1938, valued at $44,800.

This increase from the standpoint of percentage gain is higher than the national average, and the report explains that a great percentage of the accepted mortgages represents new construction. Maryland insured mortgages numbered 139, involving $645,000, as against 97, amounting to $377,500, in January last year. Virginia's figures show 116, as compared with 106 a year ago, and representing $547,600, against $475,700 in January last year.

Loan Demand Improves

Various Washington bankers have already noticed an improved demand for loans, since inception of a campaign by the advertising committee of the District of Columbia Bankers Association to inform the public that banking institutions have ample funds which they are willing to loan under favorable conditions.

The co-operative effort with this objective in view is being conducted through newspaper advertising. Since the appearance of the first advertisement, several banks have observed an increase in applications for loans and their officials ascribe the growing requests to the publicity.

Lincoln National's Birthday

Floyd E. Davis, president of Lincoln National Bank, announces that the institution is 49 years old this month, it having opened for business in March, 1890. Albert S. Gatley, now executive vice president, was a member of the organization when it started, and has been with it ever since, creating an unusual record for length of service. Mr. Gatley has also been treasurer of the District of Columbia Bankers Association for more than a quarter of a century.

Indiana Standard Nets $1.82 a Share For Past Year

Chicago, March 27 (AP).—Standard Oil Co. of Indiana will show net earnings of about $27,770,000 in its forthcoming report for 1938, President Edward G. Seubert announced today. This, he said, is the consolidated amount earned by the company itself and its share of earnings of subsidiaries on a net investment of some $663,000,000, and equals $1.82 a share on 15,272,020 shares outstanding at the end of the year. Earnings for 1937 were $55,950,784 on 15,267,030 shares, or $3.66 a share.

Continental Oil

New York, March 27.—Continental Oil Co. today reported net earnings for 1938 of $5,139,755.23, after deducting $1,071,691.41, in order to adjust inventories to the lower of book or market values. This is equivalent to $1.10 per share on 4,682,581.4 shares. Earnings for the record year 1937 were $13,948,459.99, or $2.98 per share. Dividends paid to stockholders during 1938 amounted to $4,682,387.23, or $1 per share. During the year, 430 wells were completed, in which Continental owned all or part of the working interest, 355 being productive.

Union Carbide

Union Carbide & Carbon Corporation reported today for 1938 net income of $25,173,412, equal to 2.774 a capital share, compared with $42,782,127, or $4.81 a share, in 1937.

Curtis Publishing

Curtis Publishing Co. reported a consolidated net profit of $1,279,162, or $1.63 a share on $7 preferred stocks in arrears, compared with $4,120,509, or $4.92 a share on $7 preferred in 1937.

Goodyear Tire Head Urges U. S. Rubber Reserve

Akron, Ohio, March 27.—At the annual meeting of Goodyear Tire & Rubber stockholders today, P. W. Litchfield, president, said:

"I should like to touch briefly upon a problem which bears directly upon the safety and well being of the Nation—the problem of assuring an adequate supply of crude rubber in the event of war.

"As you know, our source of crude rubber lies half way around the world on the plantations of Dutch and British East Indies. In the event of major conflict, as in the case of the last war, shipping would be disorganized and ships for bringing in sufficient crude rubber would not be available.

"The present national supply of crude rubber is scarcely more than our average five months consumption and has been steadily declining. These possibilities suggest that it would be in the national interest for this country to lay in a reserve stock of rubber. Legislation looking to this end has already been introduced in Congress and provides for the accumulation not only of rubber but of other basic raw materials not produced in the United States."

Corn Demand From Europe Lifts Prices

Exports 500,000 Bu. July at 49½ Cents; Wheat Prices Lower

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 27.—Improved European demand for corn, with several sales for early April shipment from the Gulf reported, helped to give domestic prices an upward trend today. Wheat, on the other hand, turned lower due to easing foreign political tension and favorable domestic crop reports.

Corp export business, the best in weeks, was estimated at a round 500,000 bushels, which, though not large, indicated there is still demand for American grain despite the fact that new and cheaper Argentine corn soon will be available. A cargo of afloat corn was sold to the United Kingdom and several loads were booked for first half of April shipment to the Continent. No. 2 yellow American corn was quoted at 62¾ cents for April delivery at Liverpool, 15 cents over Chicago May. Old Argentine corn was at 68¼ but the new Argentine for May delivery was priced at 59¾.

Corn closed ⅛-¼ higher than Saturday. May 47¾-⅞, July 49½. Wheat was ½-½ lower. May 67⅜, July 67⅝-½; oats ⅛-¼ down; rye ⅝-⅞ off; lard 12 to 15 lower.

Cotton Higher; July, 7.96 Cents

New York, March 27 (AP).—The cotton futures market suffered a slight deflation today after a moderate rise on mill price fixing and buying for New Orleans account.

At the best the list was only a few points above the previous closing, but just when professional operators began to think about following the move the buying tapered away and prices sagged. A little covering near the finish pushed some active contracts ahead for net gains ranging from 1 to 3 points.

The impatient quest for information regarding cotton legislation uncovered nothing of a satisfactory nature in the day's Washington news, but traders thought there was a fair chance of some definite developments later in the week.

Cottonseed Oil

Cottonseed oil futures plunged to net losses of 18 to 23 points today. Heavy liquidation—which met with only limited demand—came in the wake of new season's lows in lard, an easier hog market, poor cash demand and active competition from oil substitutes.

Sales totaled 358 lots: May 6.65, July 6.80; September 6.92, October 6.94 bid.

SEC Expert Asks Scaling Down of Insurance Assets

Chicago March 27 (AP).—Ernest J. Howe, chief financial adviser in the insurance section of the Securities and Exchange Commission, recommended today that insurance companies take immediate steps to reduce what he said appeared to be "unrealistic valuations" of their assets.

In an address entitled, "A Policy Holder Looks at Investments," Howe told the American Life's convention financial section that it was "time to stop playing blindman's buff with value."

"A total of $2,500,000,000 of mortgages," he said, "are listed in the annual reports of five leading companies at figures which fail to reflect the fact that from 6 per cent to 24 per cent of the mortgages are delinquent.

"Holdings of almost $900,000,000 of foreclosed real estate are listed in the annual reports of the same five companies at valuations which, on the average, range as high as 14 times gross earnings, despite the fact that the current market will support a rate of more than five and one-half times gross earnings."

After discussing these valuations in more detail, Howe said, "The foregoing facts present a picture of overvaluation in insurance company assets which should certainly be rectified."

Steel Operations At Top for Year

New York, March 27 (AP).—Operations in the steel industry for the current week will advance .7 of a point to 56.1 per cent of capacity, the highest level thus far in 1939, compared with 55.4 per cent last week, the American Iron & Steel Institute estimated today.

A month ago operations were at the rate of 55.8 per cent of capacity, while a year ago they were 35.7 per cent.

Business Failures

New York, March 27 (AP).—Business failures in the United States during the week ended March 23 totaled 301, duplicating the 1939 high mark, Dun & Bradstreet reported today. In the preceding week the total was 259 and a year ago 274.

Steel Activity 50 Per Cent Over Year Ago

Auto, Railroad and Structural Orders Are Basis of Advance

Cleveland, March 27.—First quarter business has presented an encouraging pattern in the steel industry, bettered in recent years only by the period in 1937, reports the magazine Steel today as the result of an extensive survey just released. Compared with first quarter 1938, the composite picture is nearly 50 per cent improved, and in some departments more.

A rising curve is characteristic of first quarter business, but this year it is devoid of important advances or recessions that have interrupted orderly progress in previous years. It follows closely the curve of 1936, precursor for the best year the industry has seen since 1929. In 1936 the steel industry started at about 40 per cent of capacity and progressed with unusual steadiness to about 80 per cent at year's end.

This was in marked contrast to 1927 with its abrupt drop in the final quarter, and 1938, with its hesitating first half and rapid rise in second half. Important factors in the steel market show a fairly parallel course for the first quarter.

Automobile output for the period is conservatively estimated at 1,039,000 units, an increase of 54 per cent over the 668,317 assembled in the corresponding months in 1938. It is slightly better than 1,013,000 for fourth quarter, 1938, when new model introduction tended to increase buying.

Railroad Buying

Railroads are providing an unexpected tonnage of steel, the total running far ahead of first quarter, 1938. Freight car buying started in September and has continued steadily; considerable inquiries still pend. While only 814 freight cars were placed during first quarter, 1938, awards since January 1 total more than 2,700, a gain of 230 per cent. Since January 1 American roads have placed contracts for more than 400,000 tons of rails, compared with 112,150 tons in the initial quarter last year, 250 per cent increase.

Structural steel has contributed importantly to the general increase in steel demand, first quarter placements being estimated from Steel's weekly compilations at 308,000 tons, compared with 202,529 tons in the same period of 1938, a gain of 52 per cent. Demand for steel bars for concrete reinforcing also has been stronger, estimated buying for the first quarter being 146,000 tons, compared with 69,498 tons a year ago.

Retail Advertising Continues Upward

Chicago, March 23.—For the third consecutive weekly period, the volume of newspaper advertising placed by retailers during the week ended March 18 showed a gain over the corresponding week of last year, Advertising Age reported today.

During the week of March 18 retailers in 80 major cities placed a total of 20,141,260 lines of display advertising in their local newspapers, compared with 19,730,851 lines placed by the retailers in the same cities last year. This is an increase of 2.1 per cent, compared with an increase of 1.7 per cent for the preceding week, and a slightly smaller increase for the week ended March 4.

B. & O. Operating Net Shows Large Gain

Baltimore, March 27.—The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad reports for February a net operating income of $1,260,259 which compares with a loss of $920,817 for the same month last year, an increase of $2,181,076.

Railway operating revenues totaled $10,837,049 for the month of which freight revenues accounted for $9,512,388. Railway operating expenses were $8,492,267, compared with $8,820,295 for the corresponding period a year ago, a decrease of $328,028.

Trinity M. E. and D. C. Commissioners, survivors of the 14 Community Center League champions who took part in the annual city-wide basketball tournament, meet tonight at Tech gym in the game that will decide the departmental titlist for 1939. The game starts at 7 p. m.

In the other half of a double-header, two teams of high school stars, including eight Washington Post All-High selections, come together as a special added attraction. The Post stars participating are Howard Hancock, Eli Blank, George West and Sidney Shulman, of the 1939 team, and Bob Custer, Lee Lusby, Russ Lombardy and Lenny Stanton, of the 1938 aggregation. Other outstanding players will be Les Cooksey, Hymie Perlo, Charley Findley, Jimmy Horn, Harry Martin, John Fanning, Bob Holloran and Jack Smith.

The feature game, for the Community Center title, should be a fast, high-scoring battle, both teams being strong on offense. Ackey Viana will lead the Trinity corps and Johnny Williamson the Commissioners.

George Washington And Virginia U. Renew Relations

George Washington University has renewed athletic relations with the University of Virginia after a lapse of many years and will meet the Cavaliers in basketball next season, Max Farrington, director of athletics, announced yesterday.

Virginia will be host to the Colonial cagers at Charlottesville next February 3 and will visit Washington for a return game the following year. Farrington also hopes to schedule Virginia in baseball and tennis, as well as in freshman sports, he said.

fishermen. It seems that if they aren't catching anything they don't want anybody to know it, and if they are they don't want everybody else tossing in his line alongside.

We came to anchor after a couple of hours and dropped our lines over. In a couple of minutes the captain hauled his in with a squirming three-pounder on the end of the line.

"Is that a kingfish?" I asked in mild excitement.

"No," he replied, "that's a grouper. But he's a pretty good one," so he tossed him into the large can we had prepared for our day's catch.

Caught: One Rewfich

Then we sat for several minutes and nothing happened. I began wondering why it was that the captain could throw in his line and almost immediately get a strike, while the rest of us couldn't even get a nibble after a quarter of an hour.

But suddenly I felt a tug at my line and more in surprise than anything else I gave the rod a jerk and started yelling that I had one.

A little hysterically I started reeling in the line, lowering the rod to give it slack, then reeling as I lifted it again. I had seen someone do this in a newsreel and it seemed the proper technique.

Anyway I landed something that looked about the size of a porpoise and was greatly elated at catching my first fish.

"Is that a kingfish?" I asked.

"No. It's a redfish," came the reply. "Better throw him back."

But to this I vigorously objected. I had some idea of having it mounted. Other fishermen always had their catches mounted and, after all, this might be the only fish I ever would catch.

As a matter of fact it was the only fish I caught there, for after about half an hour we moved on to another spot, then another. Finally we came to anchor beyond sight of shore and there wasn't another craft on the horizon. But in a few minutes another boat pulled up near and dropped anchor, then another, and pretty soon there were a dozen around the spot.

A Bunch of Sheep-Boats

"This must be a good place," I said, nodding toward all the activity on the other boats.

But the captain shook his head. "Not necessarily," he said. "One of them saw us fishing here and figured we might be catching something, then another saw two boats and figured the same way, and pretty soon they all came round."

It seems that fishermen are a lot of sheep in that respect.

So the day wore on and we ate the fried chicken and turned on the radio and heard the news reports and some Spanish music and smoked cigarettes and lazily let the sun beat down on our backs. And now and then someone would pull in a fish.

We caught, besides my redfish and the captain's grouper, some amberjack, some rockfish, some mackerel and several other species whose names I have forgotten.

But when we sailed back to the Combes' dock we didn't have a single kingfish in the tub.

On Fishing

Without getting out the charts for past performances, we would say the run of white perch is on time almost to a day. And the run is on for this most delectable of all the migratory fishes, that is the first harbinger of spring in our local waters, for over the week-end they were caught in many places. The best creels coming from the upper Patuxent and bay rivers.

ACKERMAN

Bromley Hunter's creel of 78, caught in West River, had a few weighing close to a pound, while nearly every one of the 38 caught by Harry Schou and T. Griffis on the Patuxent between Pigs Point and Sunderland, weighed around the three-quarter mark.

They had Milton Gordon out of bed an hour early yesterday morning to get a fresh supply of bloodworms so they could go back to give them another whirl.

Anglers fishing the Potomac in the neighborhood of Capt. Joe Fletcher's caught white perch on both Saturday and Sunday, but they weren't as large as they might be—and probably will be, later this week, with a continuance of reasonable weather.

Catches of catfish, at the same place, were consistent, but few of them better than table size—averaging a pound or a little better.

An angling game, "Playing Tag With White Marlin," for which we laid the groundwork last summer at Ocean City, and hope to see really get under way this coming season, has reached a point in the Miami sector where everyone is playing it—with sailfish. Teams are formed—it has reached the headlines in southern Florida papers—and the fine part about this game, it supplies sportsmen with real sport and at the same time conserves a grand sports fish.

It is played by first catching a "sail," and after boating it instead of permitting it to bleed its life out on the floorboards of the boat, a tag supplied by the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries is clipped to the gill-cover and the fish released.

The next angler catching the fish, after filling out the required blank for the bureau in Washington, enters his fish in a sort of super-fishing tournament. That still does not require the killing of the sporty adversary, only the removal of the one gill clip and the insertion of another.

Citations will be awarded anglers catching tagged fish, but even this isn't the end of the game. That comes with the data, and the story of the migrations of the sailfish, that will unfold season after season, with more and better fishing.

A start has been made with Ocean City guide boats, particularly Capt. Crawford Savage and Capt. Lee Raymond. And with a season comparable to that of last year, there is every hope for the release of possibly a hundred or more.

Gertrude Ederle Gets World's Fair Contract

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

Agencies that have found the civil service registers of press men to be hopeless, are looking optimistically to a new register that will be established from those who took the principal informational representative examination. The National Bituminous Coal Commission has had a terrible time trying to get press help through the C. S. C. Inasmuch as hundreds of competent Washington newspapermen took the principal informational representative examination, the C. S. C. will undoubtedly find itself with a better stock on its shelves.

The differences of opinion among the several Federal employe unions in Washington are hazarding retirement legislation in this session of Congress. H. Carroll Dimond, cautious, conservative and a national vice-president of the American Federation of Government Employees, says:

"Representatives of the A. F. G. E. have been in conference with the legislative representatives of other groups in an effort to agree upon as many of the desired retirement features as will have a chance of receiving favorable Congressional attention. Strong differences of opinion among the several employe groups make it difficult to obtain action by the Congressional committees. It is essential, therefore, if we are to get action this year, that all groups get together and present a united program. It may be necessary for some to sacrifice certain features in order to get anything at all. Stubbornly insisting upon getting all or nothing does not appeal to the great majority of men and women in the Government service who are hoping for improvement in the retirement system; and leaders of any group who, by such tactics, persist in blocking retirement legislation must be held accountable."

The WPA Press Section, which disseminates legitimate information, is living in terror of being merged with the WPA Information Section. What the future holds for David K. Niles still can't be seen by the best gazers in the crystal ball. And Harry Hopkins drops no clue.

Gov. Blanton Winship, of Puerto Rico, has arrived in town to see "something about our problems down there" and will leave for Miami Saturday to take a plane back to the island. This afternoon, the Puerto Rican [illegible] gives him a cocktail party at the Mayflower Hotel. Those P. R. T. C. parties for the Governor are tradition now.

The Postoffice Department's philatelic truck is due from the shed about April 1. Its journey around the country familiarizing Americans with how stamps are made should come not so long after. The personnel to man the vehicle hasn't been picked. These choice jobs are wide open. But there's little chance for anyone outside the department.

With plans for the new Social Security Building under way, here are some of the wants, as formally expressed to the board officials by groups of employes:

1. Complete recreation facilities, including a gymnasium, basketball courts, swimming pool and tennis courts.

2. An auditorium and perhaps one or more smaller meeting rooms for employes.

3. A Government-owned and operated cafeteria, "so that employes can have the benefit of the best foods at the lowest prices.

4 A cashier's office for cashing employes' pay checks. The office might serve as headquarters for the Credit Union.

5. Free parking space for all employes who wish to use it.

6. A branch postoffice, complete with rental boxes and postal savings service. These requests were made by the U. F. W. A. members in the SSB.

Representative Robert Ramspeck, of Georgia, addresses the Society for Personnel Administration on "Pending Legislation Affecting the Federal Civil Service," at a dinner meeting to be held at 6:30 p. m. Thursday evening at the Y. W. C. A.

Bob Burns Says—

Some one sent me a copy of one of them big business magazines the other day. And I looked through it and I was glad to see that things are gettin' better. Of course, everybody knew they would all the time, and as a matter of fact, I don't suppose they ever were as bad as they seemed, because it's just human nature to expect the worst.

Now you take my Grandpa Snazzy. There's a man who's as hearty today as he was twenty years ago, but every time he gets sick he's just sure his time has come. I remember last winter he come down with a sore throat, and when the doctor got there, Grandpa said, "Doc, you're lookin' at a dyin' man." The doctor looked him over and said, "Shucks, Snazzy, you're as well as you ever were. Don't you know that the first twenty-four hours after birth are the most dangerous of a man's life?"

Grandpa sat up and said, "Excuse me, Doc, but ain't the last twenty-four a bit risky, too?"

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Championships are won more often by close hands than the bidding of easy games and slams. Today's deal, played by S. Garton Churchill and Harry Fishbein, both winners in the recent Eastern championships, proves this point. It required skillful and delicate handling of both bidding and play to push North-South beyond their depth and defeat them.

Successive trump leads and the alert cashing of a trick were responsible for the two-trick set and top score earned by East-West on the board. Here is the way a kibitzer describes it:

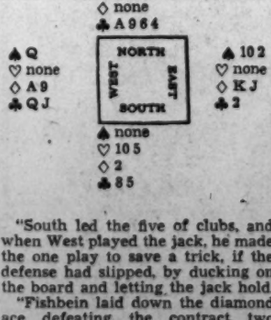
"Of the bidding, Churchill explained that East's double was based on the fact that West was marked with substantial values because of the adversaries' weak bidding.

"The double by West confirmed the substantial values assumed by his partner, and denoted a defensive-type hand. He desired to play three spades or defend.

"Fishbein opened the four of spades, Churchill played the nine, and the king won in the South hand. Dummy was entered with the club king, and a small diamond returned, which East ducked, declarer playing the ten and West winning with the queen.

"Fishbein correctly analyzed the diamond play as being an attempt to establish a ruff, and consequently led the nine of hearts. The jack was played from the North hand, and East won with the queen.

"East returned the spade jack, and declarer won with the ace. He led the five of diamonds, which Fishbein took with the eight, playing another heart. Churchill won the king with the ace and immediately killed the ruff by returning the heart six. This was the situation:



"South led the five of clubs, and when West played the jack, he made the one play to save a trick, if the defense had slipped, by ducking on the board and letting the jack hold.

"Fishbein laid down the diamond ace defeating the contract two tricks, doubled, for a lone top score (any other play by West at this point results in only a one-trick set for a poor score, as East and West can make three spades). South lost three diamonds, two hearts and a club trick."

Bedtime Story

By Thornton W. Burgess.

Peter Rabbit Fears the Worst

Peter Rabbit, watching from the dear Old Briar-patch, was early aware that Harrier the Marsh Hawk and Mrs. Harrier had begun to build a nest. He had seen them carrying the first sticks to make the platform for that nest. Sitting up very straight that he might see better he had watched to see just where that nest was to be. It would be well to know. It might be awkward to blunder onto that nest with one or both of those Hawks at home. He had the feeling that that vicinity would be a good place to keep away from.

"I told you," said Peter to little Mrs. Peter, "that those Hawks would build on the Green Meadows. I felt it in my bones when we saw Harrier showing off to Mrs. Harrier."

Mrs. Peter sighed. "I hoped you were wrong, but I guess you were right," said she. "I don't see why they don't have their nest over in the Green Forest instead of right out in the open, and on the ground at that. Do you know of any other Hawks that build their nests on the ground?"

Peter admitted that he didn't. "But then," he added, "I don't know of any other members of their family that are so seldom seen in the woods. I guess they don't like the Green Forest. I guess they don't like the trees. I never see either of them sitting in a tree. I have seen one of them sitting on a fence post, but I guess they don't do that often. They don't sit around and watch for someone they can catch to show himself. That is the way some of their cousins do, but it isn't the way of Mr. and Mrs. Marsh Hawk. They are hunters, not waiters, and I suppose that that is why when we do see them it is almost always in the air. With them around, I'm glad I'm not a mouse."

"I hope they won't catch Danny or Nanny Meadow Mouse," said Mrs. Peter.

"You wonder what?" asked Mrs. Peter.

"I wonder if something hasn't already happened to Danny and Nanny Meadow Mouse. I haven't seen either of them lately. I'm sure something must have happened to them. They must have been caught by one of those Hawks," Peter replied.

"Why must? Those Hawks have hunted here other years and haven't caught Danny or Nanny, so why should you think they have been any more lucky this year" Mrs. Peter wanted to know.

"That nest!" cried Peter.

"What about that nest?" demanded Mrs. Peter.

"It is almost right side of the home of Danny and Nanny if it isn't actually on top of it. Anyway, that is where they were living the last time I saw either of them. I was passing that way and happened to discover it. What chance did they have when those robbers began building there? I ask you." Peter was much excited.

"It doesn't seem as if they would have much chance," admitted Mrs. Peter.

"Of course they wouldn't. They wouldn't have any," asserted Peter. "But they may not have been there. They may have moved before the Harriers arrived. You know Danny and Nanny have always moved about a good deal," said Mrs. Peter.

Peter admitted that this was true, but he stuck to it that he feared the worst. "If they hadn't moved, and I don't believe they had, they were bound to be caught. They just couldn't help but be with such dangerous neighbors as those living next door. You take it from me we'll never see either of them again, and it is just too bad," declared Peter.

Mrs. Peter had to admit that it did seem that this was probably true, but still hoped that she was right and that they had moved in time.
